VOL. XCIII.-NO. 2416

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1911

Reg. U. S. PRICE TEN CENTS

BOOKS OF PERMANENT VALUE

THE GREATEST STREET IN THE WORLD

The Story of Broadway, Old and New, from Bowling Green to Albany

By STEPHEN JENKINS

Member Westchester County Historical Society

160 illustrations and six maps. $3.50 net.

Mr. Jenkins has presented the whole history of Broadway, old and new, through all the miles of its long course from the Bowling Green to Albany; its historic associations from pre-Revolutionary times to the present, its theatres and the actors that made them famous, its literary incidents and personalities, the busy hum of city life that rises beavenward between its towering buildings, and all the abundant energy that flows through it ceaselessly.

TREE

By Arthur Christopher Benson

$1.50 net.

Contents: Bishon Westcott, Henry Sidgwick, J. K. Stephen, Bishop Wilkinson, Professor Newton, Frederick Myers, Bishop Lightfoot, Henry Bradshaw, Matthew Arnold, Charles Kingsley, Bishop Wordsworth of Lincoln.

Mr. Benson presents biographical sketches and appreciations of certain distinguished men, each one of whom, through his life, his character, his works, and above all through personal contact, exercised a constructive influence upon the author of The Upton Letters and of The Silent Isle.

THE LEAVES OF THE SOUTH AMERICA OF TO-DAY

A Study of Conditions, Social, Political, and Commercial, in Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil.

By Georges Clemenceau

Formerly Prime Minister of France

$2.60 net.

This volume must be distinguished from the ordinary narrative of travel

In foreign lands,

As one of the leading and most forceful citizens of the French Republic, he was afforded by the sister republics of South America exceptional opportunities for studying at first hand their institutions and received from the contractions of the contraction of t their institutions and systems of gov-ernment. He came in touch with many ernment. of the presidents of these republics, with cabinet officers and officials of rank; he visited their prisons, their asylums, and their educational institutions; he got an insignt into their industries both in city and in country.

THE ROMANTIC LIFE OF SHELLEY

AND THE SEQUEL

By Francis Henry Gribble

6 illustrations. $3.75 net.

The romantic life of Percy Bysshe Shelley could have found no better interoreter than Mr. Gribble. The pathetic figure of Harriet Westbrook and the dominant, rich personality of Mary Godwin are as inseparably connected with Shelley's name as are Alastor and Prometheus Unbound. Mr. Gribble has given us no dry estimate of the man and his work, but an anecdotal life, full of gossip and side-lights and fascinating details.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A PARISIAN

(Dr. Poumiès de la Siboutie)

Under Six Sovereigns, Two Revolutions, and a Republic, 1789-1863 8vo. $3.00 net.

"Here is a book to read and re-read. No more interesting book of recollections has appeared in years. The genial doctor who wrote it lived under six sovereigns, one republic, and witnessed two revolutions. His diaries cover the period from 1789 to 1863, which latter was the year of his death." Miss J. L. Gilder in "The Reader."

"Paris, sullen, poverty stricken, discontented; Paris intoxicated by the enthusiasm for a great leader; Paris under defeat and plague; Paris deceiving herself into a false gaiety; Paris in a hundred moods, palpitates with life in these pages . . . the events have never been described with greater reality." Manchester Courier.

Send for New Illustrated Catalogue

NEW YORK: 4. and 6 West 45th St. 27 and 29 West 23d St.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

LONDON: 24 Bedford Street

The Nation

A WEEKLY JOURNAL.

FOUNDED IN 1865.

I Entered at the New York City Post Office as second-class mail matter.]

The Nation is published and owned by the New York Evening Post Co. Oswald Garrison Villard, President; William J. Pattison, Treasurer; Paul Elmer More, Editor.

Three dollars per year in advance postpaid, in any part of the United States or Mexico; to Canada $3.50, and to foreign countries comprised in the Poetal Union $4.00.

Address THE NATION, Box 794, New York. Publication Office, 20 Vesey Street.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE WEEK ..... 353

EDITORIAL ARTICLES:

| Wilson on Tait and Trusts     | 356 |
|-------------------------------|-----|
| Supreme Court Timber          |     |
| The Tobacco Trust Dissolution | 357 |
| British Hysteria              |     |
| Weeding Out the Hymn-books    | 359 |

SPECIAL ARTICLES:

| The | Life | of | a | Laureate   | 8 | * * |  |  |  |  |  | 360 |
|-----|------|----|---|------------|---|-----|--|------|--|--|--|-----|
|     |      |    |   | tophiles . |   |     |  |      |  |  |  |     |

CORRESPONDENCE:

| A Letter of Hazlitt's "Current Money" Why Shakespeare Left Stratford Simplified Spelling |
|--|
| Why Shakespeare Left Stratford   |
|  |
|  |

LITERATURE:

| The Land of the Hittites              | 36 |
|---------------------------------------|----|
| Her Little Young Ladyship             | 36 |
| White Motley                          | 36 |
|                                       | 36 |
| The Heart of a Woman                  | 36 |
|                                       | 36 |
| The Collected Papers of Frederic Wil- |    |
| liam Maitland                         |    |
| Briefe Kaiser Wilhelms des Ersten     | 36 |
| The Cambridge History of English      |    |
|                                       | 37 |
| Louis XIV and Madame de Maintenon     |    |
| The First English Life of Henry V.,   | 37 |

SCIENCE:

| Some | Negle  | cted | Factor | ı in  | Evelution. |
|------|--------|------|--------|-------|------------|
| -H   | eredit | ary  | Charac | ters. | -Converg-  |
| ence | n in   | Evol | utlon  | The   | Mutation   |
| The  | OFF    |      |        |       |            |

Notes ..... 372

DRAMA:

| "National"          | Plays    | * | 376 |
|---------------------|----------|---------------|-----|
| 2 1 10 21 2 21 20 2 | w week m |               | 000 |

Music:

Voice and Its Natural Development.

—The Philosophy of Music.—Unfigured Harmony.—School of the Piano Pedal .....

ART ..... 379

| European | Lenders | and  | American | Bor- |
|----------|---------|------|----------|------|
| rowers   | * | * |  | 39   |

BOOKS OF THE WEEK ...... 381

 Copies of The Nation may be procured in Paris at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opéra; in London of B. F. Stevens & Brown, 4 Trafalgar Square, Charing Cross.

Educational

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.

2A Park Street, Boston 1416 F St., Washington 156 Fifth Av., New York G11 Swetiand Bd., Portland 814 Steger Bd., Chicago 238 DouglasBd., LosAngeles 405 Cooper Bd., Denver 2142 ShattuckAv., Berkeley Send to any address above for Agency Manual.

ALBANY TEACHERS' AGENCY

pplies schools of all grades with competen schers. Assists teachers in obtaining positions and for Bulletin No. 20.

HARLAN P. FRENCH, 81 Chapel St., Albany, N.Y.

JUST PUBLISHED

BRIEF COURSE IN ANALYTIC GEOMETRY

By J. H. TANNER, Professor of Mathemat-les in Cornell University, and JOSEPH ALLEN, Assistant Professor of Mathe-matics in the College of the City of New York. 81.50 81.50

This is an abridgment of the same authors' Elementary Course, which has been adopted by many of the leading colleges and scientific schools. Without slighting anything essential, some of the less important details have been omitted or shortened.

AMERICAN BOOK COMPANY ew York Cincinnati Chica New York

Fundamental Facts

For the Teacher By ELMER BURRITT BRYAN,

President of Colgate University.

A refreshing and attinulating philosophy for every-day living is here set forth with incisive power. It will earlich the life and strengthen the work of every teacher who reads it.

When you have finished reading this book you are not through with it. Its trenchant phrases hold fast in your memory and are fruitful in suggestion. A splendid book for teachers.

Price, One dollar. President of Colgate University.

SILVER, BURDETT & COMPANY BOSTON NEW YORK CHICAGO

Just Published

Bergen and Caldwell's PRACTICAL BOTANY

81.30

The word practical describes it. Only the most serviceable material is used, so that those who do not take up the advanced study of the subject may gain an adequate and useful knowledge of the science. Much interesting luformation is given relating to the present-day aspects of agricultural, horticultural and industrial pursuits.

GINN & COMPANY, 29 Beacon St., Boston

THE HISTORY AND PROBLEMS OF ORGANIZED LABOR

By FRANK T. CARLTON, Ph.D. This work treats in detail the historical development of organized labor, and the problems that confront the laborer.

D. C. HEATH & Co., Publishers. Boston New York Chicago London

The Best New Book on Canada.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA

By W. L. GRIFFITH

In the "All Red" British Empire Beries. The most comprehensive one-volume book that has yet been written.—Nation, Aug. 17.
Sco., 450 pages. Illustrations and Maps. $3.00 met. LITTLE, BROWN & CO., Publishers, BOSTON

Industrial Socialism by William D. Hay-wood and Frank Bohn, is the most important contribution to the literature of American Socialism yet published. Paper, 64 pages, 10c. postpaid, catalog free. Cheries H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, Chicago.

The kind of book one likes to read in a dinner gown after the guests have gone.

GARDEN

By ELIZABETH WALLACE

HE intimate home life of a typi-cal French family is set forth in Miss Wallace's little book in in Miss Wallace's little book in the most charming way imaginable. It is like a series of pictures from Thackeray. Madame, the Hostess, la petite Grand'mere, Philippe, the sister Placide, all become living personalities and the reader is taken into their circle as one of them. And the Garden! Where are there such gardens as in Paris? Miss Wallace is known to a wide circle through her connection with the University of Chicago, and her little book cannot but add to her reputation.

With Dainty Line Drawings. $1.25 net

For Sale at Bookstores

A. C. McCLURG & CO., Publishers New York CHICAGO San Francisco

The Harvard Theological Review

FOR OCTOBER contains

EMERSON FROM AN INDIAN POINT OF VIEW

By Professor Maitra of Calcutta together with articles by the Professors of Systematic Theology

in HARVARD

AUBURN

ANDOVER and by

Professor Calkins of Wellesley Price 50 cents

Published by Harvard University For sale at the Newsstands

FOREIGN Send for catalogue. TAUCHNITZ BRITISH

BOOKS 128 Tremont Street. AUTHORS

HOOKS—All out-of-print books supplied, no matter on what subject; write me, stating books wanted; I can get you any book ever published; when in England, call and inspect my stock of 50,000 rare books. BAKER'S GREAT BOOKSHOP, John Bright St., Birmingham, England.

A set of the Publications of the Southern History Association. Complete save for one part of one volume. Apply to J. E. Winston, 42 Mercer Street, Princeton, N. J.

McClurg's Important New Books

ARTS AND CRAFTS OF OUR TEUTONIC FOREFATHERS

By G. BALDWIN BROWN, Professor of Fine Arts, University of Edinburgh,

The aim of this important work is to describe the little known artistic activities and achievements of the Teutonic peoples before they overthrew the Roman Empire. Much attention is paid to the interesting question of the material and technical processes used by these early craftsmen, and the origin and history of inlaid gold jewelry are fully discussed. With 22 maps and 130 illustrations. Small quarto. Net $1.75.

ENGLISH COUNTRY LIFE

By WALTER RAYMOND, author of "The Book of Simple Delights," etc.

What Miss Mitford did for "Our Village" in the early 19th century Mr. Raymond has done for the life of the hamlet of England to-day. The rustic character, its humor and its simplicity, is sympathetically portrayed. Mr. Wilfrid Ball's illustrations are a notable feature of the work, which forms an ideal gift book.

With 16 illustrations ir color by WILFRID BALL, R.E. Crown 8vo. Net $1.75.

ANNALS OF THE PARISH

By JOHN GALT

"Certainly no such picture of the life of Scotland during the closing years of the last century has ever been written. He does what no other can do so well. He shows us with vivid directness and reality what were like the quiet lives of leal folks, burghers, and ministers, and country lairds a hundred years ago." -S. R. Crockett.

With 16 illustrations in color by Henry W. Kerr, R.S.A. Crown 8vo. Net $1.75.

ARRAN OF THE BENS, THE GLENS, AND THE BRAVE

By MacKENZIE MacBRIDE

Some of the finest and most typical highland scenery is to be found in Arran, where the very air is charged with the romance of Bruce and Douglas and of the Ossianic myth, Mr. MacBride has filled a much felt want in preparing this work, which treats in a most readable form of the scenery and antiquities of the island, its legends, its history, and its people. Most of the illustrations, by Mr. J. Lawton Wingate, whose Erin pictures are so well known, have been especially painted for this volume.

With 16 illustrations in color by J. LAWTON WINGATE, R.S.A. Crown 8vo. Net $1.75.

THE PAGEANT OF THE FORTH, AND THE HISTORY AND ROMANCE OF ITS SHORES

By STEWART DICK, author of "Arts and Crafts of Old Japan," etc.

Mr. Dick has described the charm and Old World flavor of the ancient towns and fishing villages lying clustered along the shores of the Forth. These places have long been the haunts of many of the leading Scottish artists, a selection of the finest of whose pictures are here reproduced in color.

With 24 illustrations in color by eminent Scottish artists. Crown 8vo. Net $1.75.

• . These four volumes are uniform with our beautiful Holiday editions of "Dean Ramsay's Recollections," etc. The illustrations are all "art mounts."

KANSAS IN THE SIXTIES

By Hon. SAMUEL J. CRAWFORD, War-Governor of Kansas and Brigadier-General Union Forces Operating in Missouri.

General Crawford's name is familiar to all Kansans. His book of recollections covers his long life spent in Kansas in the service of that State, and his exciting kansas in the service of that State, and his exciting experiences as a General in the Union Army in the operations west of the Mississippi. The period during which the author was "War-Governor" of Kansas was made famous by the Indian wars, and the events of that time were thrilling in the extreme. His recollections will be read with great appreciation by all interested in the history of the development of the West, and especially by the people of the State with whose affairs he has been so long and prominently connected. nected.

With portraits. Crown 8vo. Net $2.00.

THROUGH THE HEART OF CANADA

By FRANK YEIGH.

This book comes at an opportune time and from the hand of one who knows his Canada well. He makes the reader see the things he describes and points out in an attractive way the advantages of life in the Do-minion. The volume is in every way an important one.

Fully illustrated. Large 8vo. Net $2.75.

"Mr. Yeigh gives a vivid and entertaining account of the country and points out the advantages of living which it affords. His descriptiveness is not sketchy, and the book is a serious contribution to the understanding of Canada and Canadian conditions."

—The Indianapolis Star.

A. C. McCLURG & CO., Chicago New York San Francisco

THOMAS Y. CROWELL COMPANY'S New Publications for 1911

FICTION

| Rainier of the Last Frontier. By John Marvin Dean. Colored frontispiece. 12mo, net Monna Lisa: The Quest of the Woman Soul. By Guglielmo Scala. Colored frontispiece.   |  |
|---|--|
| On the Iron at Big Cloud. By Frank L. Packard. Colored frontispiece. 12mo, net  A Watcher of the Skies. By Gustave F. Mertins. Colored frontispiece. 12mo, net  Best English Tales. Edited by Adam L. Gowans. Frontispiece. Flexible cloth, net $0.75.  Limp leather, net  | 1.251.25   |
| Resurrection. By Count Lyof N. Tolstoi. Blue Cloth, $1.25. Luxembourg Illustrated Edition. 17 full-page drawings by Pasternak  | 1.50   |
| HOLIDAY EDITIONS  |  |
| Tannhäuser. By Richard Wagner. Translated by T. W. Rolleston. Illustrated in color by Pogany. 4to, cloth, net $5.00. Leather, net $10.00. Limited edition, net  | 2.00   |
| The Rose and the Ring. By W. M. THACKERAY. Colored illustrations and numerous drawings in black and white, after Thackeray's originals, by J. R. Monsell. 8vo, net  | 1.50   |
|   |  |
| FOR YOUNG PEOPLE  |  |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo   |  |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo  The Aeroplane at Silver Fox Farm. By James Otis. Illustrated by Copeland. 8vo  Dorothy Brooke's Experiments. By Frances C. Sparhawk. Illustrated by Merrill. 8vo  The Unmannerly Tiger, and Other Korean Stories. By William Elliot Griffis. Illustrated in color. 8vo  A Life of Grant for Boys and Girls. By Warren Lee Goss. 16 full-page illustrations.  | 1.501.501.00   |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo   | 1.501.501.001.50   |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo.  The Aeroplane at Silver Fox Farm. By James Otis. Illustrated by Copeland. 8vo.  Dorothy Brooke's Experiments. By Frances C. Sparhawk. Illustrated by Merrill. 8vo  The Unmannerly Tiger, and Other Korean Stories. By William Elliot Griffis. Illustrated in color. 8vo.  A Life of Grant for Boys and Girls. By Warren Lee Goss. 16 full-page illustrations. 8vo.  The Dawn of British History. By Alice Corkran. Colored frontispiece by Stephen Reid, and many illustrations in text by M. Lavars Harry. 12mo.  Secrets of the Hills. By Sterling Craig. 16 full-page illustrations. 8vo | 1.501.501.001.501.251.50                         |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo   | 1.501.501.001.501.251.50                         |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo   | 1.501.501.501.501.251.501.251.501.50 |
| The Circle K. By Edwin L. Sabin. Illustrated by Rowe. 8vo   | 1.501.501.001.501.251.501.501.50         |

THOMAS Y. CROWELL COMPANY—Continued

| FOR YOUNG PEOPLE—Continued  |      |
|---|------|
| Happy Children. A Book of Bedtime Stories. By Ella Farman Pratt. Illustrated in color   |      |
| by Laetitia Herr. Decorative title-page. 8vo  |      |
| The Witch's Kitchen. By GERALD YOUNG. Illustrated with colored plates, full-page drawings,  |      |
| pen-and-ink sketches in the text, etc., by Pogany. 8vo, net   | 2.00 |
| POETRY  |      |
| America the Beautiful and Other Poems. By Katharine Lee Bates. 12mo, net  | 1.25 |
| trated. 12mo, net   | .75  |
| On Life's Highway. A Book of Verse for Graduates. Compiled by EDWARD A. BRYANT.   | 1 50 |
| Photogravure frontispiece. Flexible cloth, 12mo, net $1.00. Limp leather, net  | 1.50 |
| 12mo, net $1.00. Limp leather, net  Rossetti's Poems (Complete). Photogravure portrait as frontispiece. Thin paper edition. Limp leather, $1.25. Ooze leather | 1.50 |
| Best English and Scottish Ballads. Selected by EDWARD A. BRYANT. With frontispiece. Flex-   |      |
| ible cloth, 16mo, net $0.75. Limp leather, net   | 1.25 |
| HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, AND LITERATURE  |      |
| The Evolution of Literature. By A. S. MACKENZIE. 10 full-page illustrations. 8vo, net   | 2.50 |
| Chosen Days in Scotland. By Josephine H. Short. Illustrated. 8vo, net   | 2.00 |
| Life of L. N. Tolstoi. By NATHAN HASKELL DOLE. Illustrated. 8vo, net  | 2.00 |
| STEPHEN REID. 8vo, net  In Tudor Times. By Edith L. Elias. With 16 photographic reproductions of portraits by   | 2.50 |
| In Stewart Times. By Edith L. Elias. With 16 full-page copies of portraits by famous  | 1.50 |
| painters. 12mo  | 1.50 |
| cloth, $0.75. Limp leather   | 1.00 |
| ETHICS AND DELICION   |      |
| ETHICS AND RELIGION   |      |
|   | 1.00 |
| Learning to Love. By J. R. MILLER. Illustrated in color. 12mo, net  |      |
| The Eight Pillars of Prosperity. By JAMES ALLEN. 12mo, net  | 1.00 |
| Man: King of Mind, Body, and Circumstance. By James Allen. 12mo, net  | .50  |
| Preludes and Interludes. By Amory H. Bradford. 12mo, net  | 1.00 |
| Some Outdoor Prayers. By George A. Miller, 16mo, net  | .35  |
| The Beauty of Self-Control. By J. R. MILLER. 12mo, net  | 1.00 |
| za zamono na a zieneco de raspi tratao zine   | 100  |
| MISCELLANEOUS   |      |
| Opera Synopses. By J. W. McSpadden. 16mo, net   | .75  |
| Jot it Down. A Diary that Never Grows Old. Size 4 x 6½. Cloth, $1.00. Limp seal grain leather, $1.50. Limp ooze leather                                       | 2.00 |
| THOMAS Y. CROWELL COMPANY :: " NEW YO   | ORK  |

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMERICAN BRANCH

The Concise Oxford Dictionary of Current English. Adapted by H. W. Fowler and F. C. Fowler from The Oxford English Dictionary (xii+1041 pages). Large crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.00. Also on thin Bible paper. Cloth, limp, round corners, with thumb index, $2.00. And in full Alaska seal, limp leather lined, with thumb index, $3.50.

"A miracle of condensed scholarship, and the most satisfactory and practical of its kind in the language."—N. Y. Evening Sun.

Frederick James Furnivall: A Volume of Personal Record. Demy 8vo. Cloth, $1.40.

Kant's Critique of Aesthetic Judgement. Translated, with seven Introductory Essays, Notes, and Analytical Index, by James Creed Meredith, M.A. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $3.40.

Caesar's Conquest of Gaul. By T. Rice Holmes, Hon.Litt.D. Second edition. Revised throughout and largely re-written. 8vo. Cloth, $7.75.

The First English Life of King Henry the Fifth. Written in 1513 by an anonymous author known commonly as The Translator of Livius. Edited by Charles Lethbridge Kingsford, M.A. With Introduction, Annotations, and Glossary. 8vo. Cloth, $2.90.

The Suk: Their Language and Folklore. By Mervyn W. H. Beech. With Introduction by Sir Charles Eliot. 8vo. Cloth, $4.15.

"The book should be welcomed by all students, both of languages and anthropology."—
The Athenaeum.

La Perception du Changement. Conférences faites à l'Université d'Oxford, les 26 et 27 Mai 1911. Par Henri Bergson. 8vo. Paper, 50 cents.

Anglo-Dutch Rivalry During the First Half of the Seventeenth Century. Being the Ford Lectures, delivered at Oxford in 1910. By the Rev. George Edmundson. 8vo. Cloth, $2.00.

Documents Illustrative of the Continental Reformation. Edited by B. J. Kidd. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $4.15.

The Greek Commonwealth. Politics and Economics in Fifth Century Athens. By Alfred E. Zimmern. 8vo. Cloth, $2.90.

"May be read with pleasure and digested with profit (as we hope it will be) by all lovers of ancient Greece, and indeed by all students of the Social Problem."—Times Literary Supplement (London, Eng.).

Neutralization. By Cyrus French Wicker, M.A., LL.B., B.C.L.Oxon. 8vo. Paper covers, $1.35. Cloth, $1.75. In Four Parts.—Part I. Analysis of Permanent Neutrality. Part II. Treaties of Neutralization. Part IV. The United States and Neutralization.

Federations and Unions Within the British Empire. By H. E. Egerton. 8vo. Cloth, $2.90.

British Statesmen of the Great War, 1793-1814.
The Ford Lectures for 1911. By J. W. Fortescue. 8vo. Cloth, $2.50.

"A valuable contribution to our knowledge of the French Revolution and its consequences, as understood in the England of that day and in the England of our day. It is an especial contribution to our knowledge of the character and work of William Pitt. It should appeal to many people, for it is not overladen with argument and statistics."—The Outlook, Aug. 26, '11.

Ireland Under the Normans. By G. H. Orpen. 2 Vols. 8vo. Cloth, $6.75.

"There is no superficiality or inaccuracy about Mr. Orpen. He knows his authorities with the intimacy of old acquaintance."—The Athenaeum.

The Rise of the Greek Epic. Being a course of lectures delivered at Harvard University. Second Edition, revised and enlarged, with a new chapter on the history of the text. By Gilbert Murray. 8vo. Cloth, $2.50.

A Grammar of the Persian Language. Part I. Accidence, by the late John T. Platts, Hon. M.A. (Oxon.). Revised and Enlarged by G. S. A. Ranking. Part II. Syntax, by George S. A. Ranking, B.A., M.D. (Cantab), M.A. (Oxon). 8vo. Cloth, $4.75.

For Sale by all Booksellers. Send for Catalogue

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, AMERICAN BRANCH
35 WEST 32ND STREET, NEW YORK

"One is at a loss to crystallize in words its exact charm; it must be felt to be appreciated," says the Philadelphia Press, of

PIERRE DE COULEVAIN'S brilliant new book

The Unknown Isle

Translated by Alys Hallard

[By the Author of "On the Branch"]

The New York Times says: "The immense popularity of the work of this woman who writes under a masculine pseudonym, is one of the literary paradoxes of the age."

"It was fortunate," says the Boston Transcript, "that she was persuaded to allow her book to be translated, for 'The Unknown Isle' is of utmost interest to many others than French readers." Six printings since June 1st—112 editions in French; such is the reception which has been accorded her masterpiece, "The Unknown Isle," "It is another of her inimitable volumes of distinguished, reflective worldly-wisdom," continues the Press. "Those who remember 'On the Branch' will find here just such another story—rather less story and rather more reflection of the most interesting and illuminating sort." It is deservedly gaining thousands of new admirers for Mme. de Coulevain. Pp. 434. Net, $1.35.; postpaid, $1.50.

AMONG THE IMPORTANT NEW CASSELL BOOKS

THE LIFE OF TOLSTOY

By PAUL BIRUKOFF

With photogravure frontispiece and 16 full-page illustrations.

Net $1.50; postpaid $1,62.

This famous short "Life," now translated by W. Tcherkesoff, was written by one of Tolstoy's closest friends. Tolstoy himself actually collaborated with the author and collected personally the letters and other documents from which extracts have been quoted.

WARSHIPS AND THEIR STORY

By R. A. FLETCHER

Very fully illustrated, Large 8vo. Net $5.00; postpaid $5.30.

This handsome new companion volume to "Steamships and Their Story," deals particularly with the modern warship, and the story of its development from earliest beginnings through the course of naval history is absolutely narrated. The illustrations deserve special comment.

The New Editions de Luxe of TREASURE ISLAND AND THE MASTER OF BALLANTRAE By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

Each, net, $2.00; postage 30c. extra. At last the de luxe "Treasure Island" and "Master of Bailantrae." Bold handsome type, with wide margins, exquisite bindings in silk cloth and gold design, and 12 superb full-page illustrations in color in each volume (those in "Treasure Island" by John Cameron; "The Master of Bailantrae" by Wal Paget), are the features. These editions will delight every true Stevensonian.

THE TRUTH ABOUT EGYPT

By "J. ALEXANDER"

With eight full-page illustrations.

Net $2.00: postpaid $2.20.

The causes and progress of the present political upheaval in Egypt are explained in this timely and important book, written by one who prefers for political reasons to use a pseudonym. The author has endeavored to put the question fairly for both sides.

ASTRONOMY FOR ALL

By BRUNO H. BÜRGEL Translated by ALICE ZIMMERN

With 96 photographs and drawings. 8vo. Net $3.00; postpaid $3.25.

A book on Astronomy that is popular and interesting, and yet accurate, is rare indeed. This is a translation of a German "Astronomy" which has made an enormous success abroad. The author has succeeded admirably in imparting to the subject a new and living interest.

THE LAND OF VEILED WOMEN

By JOHN FOSTER FRASER

With 44 illustrations in color and black-and-white.

Net $1.75; postpaid, $1.90.

Mr. Fraser's travels through Algeria, Tunisia, and Morocco, including Biskra ("The Garden of Allah"), and Tangier, are embodied in this book, whose wonderful color and charm will be readily appreciated by those who have been to the Orient or would know it better.

THE NEW GARDEN OF CANADA

By T. V. TALFOURD

With 48 full-page plates and a map of the author's route.

Net $2.50; postpaid $2.70.

On the back of a pack horse, the author travelled through undeveloped British Columbia, and in this highly entertaining book brings the reader face to face with enormous riches—agricultural, mineralogical, forestal, industrial—all lying dormant, and silently calling to the plucky and persevering.

BREEDING AND THE MENDELIAN DISCOVERY

By A. D. DARBYSHIRE

With four unique illustrations in color and 34 half-tônes in black and white. Net $1.75; postpaid $1.90.

The moment has arrived for a cheap and authoritative book embodying the results of the latest investigations in Mendelism and Heredity. Mr. Darbyshire has met this need in his book, which will be useful not only to students of the Mendelian theory, but to those who are commercially interested in the successful breeding of Flowers, Birds, and Animals.

FOURTEEN YEARS A JESUIT

By COUNT VON HOENBROECH Translated by ALICE ZIMMERN

With frontispiece.

2 volumes, 8co. Net $7.50; postpaid $8.00. The fruit of fourteen years' inside knowledge of the Jesuit order, this book will be read with keen interest by those who would know something of the Inner history of the mystery-enshrouded Society of Jesus. The Jesuit system of education and moral training is minutely described and many notable figures in Roman Catholic circles—German and English—are introduced.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Publishers, 43-45 East 19th Street, NEW YORK

To Teachers and Students of Biology: We announce the publication of

EUGENIO RIGNANO

THE INHERITANCE OF ACQUIRED CHARACTERS

By BASIL C. H. HARVEY, University of Chicago

With an Additional Chapter on The Mnemonic Origin and Nature of Affective Tendencies

420 PAGES. CLOTH. $3.00 net

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

"Rignano is a student of Biology who has also the training of an engineer and physicist. He has studied biological problems thoroughly from that standpoint. He offers in this book an explanation on a physical basis of assimilation, growth, cell division and differentiation, ontogeny and the biogenetic law of recapitulation, and he suggests a mechanism whereby the inheritance of acquired characters may be effected.

"Such a study of the most fundamental and difficult of biological problems can not fail to be of the greatest interest to all students of science. To discover the essential nature of living matter, Biology needs the help of Physics and Chemistry. BASIL HARVEY.

"University of Chicago, 1911."

"Some deny fiatly the possibility of ever arriving at an understanding of the nature of life. But if we ask ourselves in what this understanding of the nature of life could consist, from the point of view of positive philosophy, we have no difficulty in recognizing that such an understanding must be reduced to comparing vital phenomena with some physico-chemical model already known, suitably modified by the particular special conditions imposed upon it so that just these special conditions shall determine the differences which exist between this vital phenomenon and the phenomenon of the inorganic world most closely related to it. If this be so, it is then the duty of science emphatically to reject such a denial of scientific thought as would be constituted by the renunciation of the quest of this understanding. Whether one clearly recognizes it or not, it is just this search for the nature of the vital principle which properly constitutes the principal object and the final goal of all biologic study in general."—E. Rignano, in "Acquired Characters," p. 334. acters," p. 334.

OPEN COURT SCIENCE SERIES

The Primary Factors of Organic Evolution. By E. D. Cope. Hustrated. Cloth. $2.00 net. (10s.)

The Soul of Man. By Paul Carus.

An investigation of the Facts of Physiological and Experimental Psychology Illustrated. Cloth. $1.50 net. (6a. net.) Paper. Sc. Psychology of the Nervous System. By Paul Carus.

An extract from the author's larger work, "The Soul of Man."

20c. (1s. 6d.)
The Hise of Man. By Paul Carus.
A Sketch of the Origin of the Human Race. Illustrated. Boards.

A Sketch of the Origin of the Human Race. Hiustratest. Bourds, cloth back. 75c. net. (3s. 6d. net.)

Species and Varieties, Their Origin by Mutation. By Hugo De Vries.

Edited by D. T. MacDougal. $5.00 net. (21s. net.)

Piant Breeding. By Hugo De Vries.

Comments on the Experiments of Nilsson and Burbank. Illustrated. Cloth, glft, $1.50 net. Paper. 75 cents.

The Mutation Theory. By Hugo De Vries.

Experiments and Observations on the Origin of Species in the Vegetable Kingdom. (2 vols.) Numerous illustrations, colored plates. Translated by Pfof. A. B. Farmer and A. D. Darbishire. Cloth, per volume, $4.00 net.

volume, $4.00 net.
Intracellular Pangenesis. By Hugo De Vrics.
Including a paper on Fertilization and Hybridization. Translated from the German by C. Stuart Gager. Cloth, $3.00 net. Including a paper on Fertilization and Hybridization. Translated from the German by C. Stuart Gager. Cloth. $3.00 net.

On Memory and the Specific Energies of the Nervous System. By Ewald Hering.

New edition including "The Theory of Nerve Activity." 75 cents

New collino inclosing the collino including the collino including net.) Paper, do cents net.

Contributions to the Annlysis of the Sensations. By

Ernst Mach. Translated by C. M. Williams, $1.25 net. (6s. 6d.)

Space and Geometry in the Light of Physiological,

Psychological, and Physical Inquiry. By Ernst

Mach. Translated by T. J. McCornack. Cloth, glit top, $1.00 net.

(5s. pct.)
The History and the Root of the Principle of the Conservation of Energy. By Ernst Mach.
Translated by Philip E. R. Jourdain. Cloth, 81.25 net. (5s. 6d.)
On the Inheritance of Acquired Characters. By Eugenio Rignano.

Rignano.

Translated by Basil C. H. Harvey. With an Appendix "On the Inemonic Origin and Nature of Affective Tendencies." Cloth, $2.00 et. (12s. 6d. net.)

The Psychology of Attention. By Th. Ribot.
Cloth, 75c. (3s. 6d.) Paper, 30 cents net.
The Disenses of Personnlity, By Th. Ribot.
Cloth, 75c. (3s. 6d.) Paper, 30 cents net.
The Disenses of the Will. By Th. Ribot.
Translated by Merwin-Marie Snell. Cloth, 75c. (3s. 6d.) Paper.

30 cents net.

The Evolution of General Ideas. By Th. Ribot.

Translated by Frances A. Welby. Cloth, $1.25. (5s.) Paper, 50 cents net.

Easary on the Creative Imagination. By Th. Ribot.
Translated by A. H. N. Baron. Cloth, $1.75 net. (7s. 6d. net.)
Paper, $1.00 net.

Paper, $1.00 net.

The Disenses of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Cloth, $1.50. The Psychic Life of Micro-Organisms. By Alfred Binet. Cloth, 75 cents. (3s. 6d.)

The Psychology of Rensoning. By Alfred Binet. Translated by Adam Gowan Whyte. Cloth, 75c. net. (3s. 6d.)

On Double Consciousness. By Alfred Binet. Cloth, 50c. net. (2s. 6d.)

On Double Consciousness. By Aifred Binet. Cloth, 50c. net. (2s. 6d.)
Has the Psychological Laboratory Proved Helpful? By L. M. Billia.
Translated from the French by Lydia G. Robinson. Pp. 16.
Paper, 15c. net.
A Mechanico-Physiological Theory of Organic Evolution. By Carl von Nageli. Summary. 20c. (9d.)
Experiments on the Generation of Insects. By Francesco Redi.
Translated from the Italian edition of 1688 by Mab Bigelow.
Illustrated. Cloth, $2.00 net. (10s. net.)
Science and Faith, or Man as an Animal, and Man as a Member of Society, with a Discussion on Animal Societies. By Paul Topinard.
Translated by T. J. McOrmack. $1.50 net. (6s. 6d. net.)
The Principles of Bacteriology. By Ferdinand Hueppe. Translated by Dr. E. O. Jordan, $1.75 net. (9s.)
The Gospel According to Darwin, By Woods Hutchinson, Cloth, $1.50. (6s.) Paper, 60 cents.
A First Book in Organic Evolution. By D. Kerfoot Shute.
Written especially for the use of students. Illustrated, seven colored plates. 2d. ed. Cloth, $1.25. (5s. 6d.) Paper, 60c. net.
(2s. 9d.)

(2s. 9d.)

Darwin and After Darwin. By George J. Romanes.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory and a Discussion of PostDarwinian Questions. Three volumes. $4.00 net.

Part I. The Darwinian Theory. Cloth. $2.00. Part II. PostDarwinian Questions: Hereditary and Utility. Cloth. $1.50. Part III. Fost-Darwinian Questions: Isolation and Physiological Selection. th.

Cloth, $1.00.

An Examination of Weismannism. By George J.

Romanes. Cloth, $1.00 pet. Paper, 40c. pet.

THE OPEN COURT PUBLISHING COMPANY

Publishers and Importers of Standard Books on Philosophy, Science and the History of Religions, Ancient and Modern.

Founded in 1887 by Edward C. Hegeler, for the purpose of establishing religion upon a Scientific basis.

Send for Complete Illustrated Catalogue

P. O. Drawer F

623-633 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Unquestionably the Greatest Book in Years

"One of the most thrilling and dramatic stories in the history of art."—Springfield Republican

MY LIFE

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF RICHARD WAGNER

"Will rank among the great autobiographies of literature."
—N. Y. Sun

Concerning the interest of MY LIFE to music lovers, the N. Y. Tribune says:

"In workshop talk the autobiography is very rich. Like all of Wagner's writing, it abounds in ideas for the practical musician to ponder. We may observe in passing, too, that there is not a trace of pedantry in the book. Wagner was too great a genius for that, and even when he is treating of purely technical matters his subject is somehow humanized and made luminous to the veriest layman by the writer's irresistible gusto."

A BOOK FOR EVERY LIBRARY

Two Vols., 8vo. Boxed, $8.50 net; Expressage extra visitor from Arabia.

THE WESTERN GATE

By P. H. W. ROSS

One of the most original and forcible arguments in favor of an American Merchant Marine that has ever been advanced.

Small 12mo. 75c. net; postpaid 85c.

A SEARCH FOR THE APEX OF AMERICA

By ANNIE S. PECK

A wonderful story of perseverance, courage, and final triumphant achievement is this story which leads up to and culminates in the account of a partial ascent of Mt. Sorata in Bolivia, and of the successful ascent of the loftier and more difficult Mt. Huascaran in Peru. By this truly remarkable exploit Miss Peck reached an altitude 1,500 feet higher than Mt. McKinley and thus outclimbed any man residing in this country!

With numerous illustrations from original photographs. 8vo. $3.50 net; postpaid, $3.72.

THE LIFE OF TOLSTOY

A New Edition

By AYLMER MAUDE

"In form and manner Mr. Maude has made his biography an exemplar for all other biographies."—Boston Transcript. 2 vols., 8vo. $6.00 net.

THE BOOK OF KHALID By AMEEN RIHANI

More entertaining and profitable by far than most books about foreign countries by American travelers is this unusual and remarkable book about America by a Illustrated. 12mo. $1.30 net; postpaid $1.45.

THE MOSLEM EAST By PIERRE PONAFIDINE

Russian Consul General at Constantinople.

Bagdad, the city of the benevolent Caliph Haroun-al-Raschid; the ancient country of Mesopotamia, round about it; Mecca, Medina, and certain remote parts of Asia Minor and Persia, have furnished the material for this very entertaining and valuable book.

Illustrated, Large 8vo. $4.00 net; postpaid $4.29.

TURNER'S GOLDEN VISIONS

Full-page reproduction in color of 5', of Turner's masterpieces, selected and arranged with accompanying text matter by C. Lewis Hind. This volume records the life and art of Turner, year by year, from birth to death.

Large 8vo, $6.50 net. Expressage extra.

"It is, indeed, a hopeful thing for American grand opera that Mr. Hooker has written MONA. It is a text that is poetic, dramatic, and pure. It is a text to inspire a composer to his loftiest flights. It provides a sufficient contrast of emotions—love, ambition, revenge, despair, and the musician who will embody these lines in glorious tones must be as exalted in his sphere as the poet is in his work."—Newark Bunday Call.

MONA

A DRAMA

By BRIAN HOOKER

Being the libretto of the new American opera, which will be presented this year by the Metropolitan Opera Company.

12mo. $1,25 net; postpaid $1.36.

"Mr. Hooker's libretto is a truly remarkable, a truly masterly, achievement in its kind. It is the first drama for music, written by an American, that deserves the -Boston Transcript.

Publishers Dodd, Mead and Company New York

Moffat, Yard & Company's Fall Publications

By WILLIAM WINTER. Fully illustrated. 8co. $3.00 net.

This work, one of the most important books, relative to any Art, will be found invaluable alike to the Actor, the Student, and the General Reader. It contains not only the stage history of those plays by Shakespeare which are customarily acted, but also it contains searching, illuminating, and fascinging analytical studies of the plays and of the great characters in them. actors in them. (Ready Nov. 15th)

MEMOIRS OF THEODORE THOMAS

By ROSE FAY THOMAS. Fully illustrated. 8vo. $3.00 net.

An adequate and brilliant account of the life of this great American composer and leader, by his widow. "I have endeavored," she writes in the preface, "to confine my own part of the narrative to a simple relation of the sequence of events in his career and to occasional touches which might reveal something of the deeper and more intimate side of his natura known only to those who shared his home."

FATHER LACOMBE

The Black Robe Voyageur

By KATHARINE HUGHES

Sec. Illustrated. $2.50 net.

This biographical story of Père Lacombe is written from the standpoint of historical and human interest. A concise and valuable account of the making of the Northwest. Illus., net $2.50.

The Life, Trial and Death of Francisco Ferrer

By WILLIAM ARCHER

Large 8vo. Illustrated, $3.00 net. The first authentic and impartial account of the life, trial, and death of this radical thinker. Mr. Archer sought to find and proclaim the truth and investigated the case about him and the causes led to his execution with praiseworthy industry and absolute impartial-

DR. JOHNSON AND FANNY BURNEY

By Prof. CHAUNCEY TINKER, of Yale University Illustrated, 800. $2.00 net.

This is a book of great value to all students of English Literature, and particularly to the admirers of Dr. Johnson. The extracts from the diary of Madame d'Arblay relating to her personal friendship with the great lexicographer have never before appeared in separate form.

SOME OLD FLEMISH

GEORGE WHARTON EDWARDS

Elaborately illustrated with six full color drawings and 32 monotones by the author. Beautifully bound and decorated. Boxed, $4.00 net. Carriage 32 cents extra.

This distinguished travel book ranks, This distinguished travel book ranks, in informative value and interest, with the author's "Holland" and "Brittany." It is highly romantic in its illustration, and is one of the most beautiful books of the season.

TWO YEARS IN THE

By PRINCESS DER LING (Mrs. Thaddens C. White.)

Illustrated with photographs taken the author. 8vo. $2.00 net. By mail,

An exceedingly interesting narrative of the experiences of the first Lady-in-Waiting to the late Empress Dowager Waiting to the late Empress Dowager of China. The Princess Der Ling is the daughter of a Chinese Ambassador to France, and was educated in Paris. Her account of the Dowager Empress is of intimate nature.

A Beautiful Holiday Edition.

BASSET: A VILLAGE CHRONICLE

By S. G. TALLENTYRE

Illustrated, boxed. 12mo. $1.50 net. By mail, $1.65.

"Absolutely unpretentious, this simple story is marked with some of the finest qualities of literature. . . . 'Basset' has its own distinction and its own exquisite quality; no finer bit of work, in its own class, has come under our notice long time."-Evening Sun, New

CONTROL OF THE

12mo. $1.50 net.

A Legal Solution of the Trust Problem. By BRUCE WYMAN, A.M., LL.B., Professor of Law in Harvard University and Lecturer in the Department of Economics.

No one can read this notable book without realizing that we are entering without realizing that we are entering upon a noteworthy period in the expansion of the influence of law. The author sees no reason for the law stopping with the control of Public Service now recognized as such.

GENIUS AND OTHER

EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN Edited by Laura Stedman and George M. Gould

8vo. $1.50 net. By mail, $1.63.

A collection of distinguished essays taken from the great body of material, the work of his maturity, left by Mr. Stedman at his death. It is an invaluable and a highly interesting volume from every point of view, one made up the highest product of Stedman's ge

THE GIFT OF SLEEP

By BOLTON HALL

With an introduction by Prof. Edward M. Meyer of Washington-Jefferson College, 12mo, $1.25 net.

This work shows how our own bodies and minds should be naturally used for their mutual healing and perfection. The author believes that Mental Science "to commend itself to ordinary people must show definite results that can be measured."

THE BAUBLE

By RICHARD BARRY

12mo. $1.26 net. Illustrated. By mail, $1.37

This is the story of a young wife who is swept off her feet by the swift current of the "new woman" movement in New York. In the beginning the heroine is an unformed, impulsive, lovable, and devoted woman. To the end she remains lovable and devoted, but she passes through fire and storm to become poised

THE SUBSTITUTE PRISONER

By MAX MARCIN

12mo. Illustrated. $1.25 net.

An exciting new novel by the author of Britz of Headquarters, in which the shrewd and indomitable Britz, Prince of Detectives, again appears, working with his fine skill on a mystery story which, in the suspense and interest contained, has rarely been surpassed.

Thirteenth Large Printing.

The House of Bondage

REGINALD WRIGHT KAUFFMAN Mr. Edwin W. Sims United States District Attorney at Chicago, says:

"It is one of the strongest books on the particular phase of the social evil problem which it covers that I have ever read. It typifies the situation in general and I can earnestly recommend it to fathers and mothers and others inter-ested in the subject."

Moffat, Yard & Company,

Union Square, New York

APPLETON'S NEWEST BOOKS

Corporations and the State By Hon. Theodore E. Burton United States Senator from Ohio

A timely volume, discussing the political, social and economic conditions which have caused the growth of corporations, and outlining the relations which exist or should exist between corporations and the state. 12mo, cloth, $1.25 net

City Government by Commission

Edited by Clinton Rogers Woodruff

Secretary of the National Municipal League

A fair statement of both sides of this much debated question. It gives a clear definition and description of the system, a discussion of the principles underlying it, arguments for and against it, accounts of its actual operation, and a summary of the results which have followed its appli-12mo, cloth, $1.50 net

Aërial Navigation

By Albert F. Zahm, A.M., M.E., Ph.D. Governor of the Aero Club of America

A popular treatise on the growth of air craft from the earliest beginning to the present day, with chapters on aeronautical meteorology. Every type of air machine is discussed in detail. 132 illustrations, 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00 net

The Sun

By Charles G. Abbott

Director Smithsonian Astrophysical Laboratory

A semi-popular work, embodying the latest investigations in the field of solar research. 102 illustrations and 34 tables. 820, cloth, $2.50 net

As I Kemember

By Marian Gouverneur

Recollections of American Society during the Nineteenth Century

Mrs. Gouverneur's social experiences date back to the days of John Quincy Adams. She has known more great men and women, perhaps, than any other living American woman.

Illustrated, 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00 net

The Economy of Food

By J. Allan Murray, B.Sc.

A popular treatise on nutrition, food, and diet, for housekeepers, cooks, nurses, students of domestic economy, etc. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.50 net

The Bride of Two Kings

By Edmund B. d'Auvergne

A forgotten tragedy of the Portuguese Court. The story of Marie Francoise and her two royal ands.

**Illustrated, 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $4.00 special net husbands.

The Golf Courses of the British Isles

Described by Bernard Darwin

Painted by Harry Rountree

A delightful account of the chief golf links of Great Britain, superbly illustrated with paintings reproduced in full colors. A gift book of unusual excellence.

64 illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $5.50 special net

THE LATEST NOVELS

The Common Law By Robert W. Chambers. Pictures by Gibson. Cap'n Warren's Wards By Joseph C. Lincoln. The Conflict By David Graham Phillips.
The Reason Why By Elinor Glyn.
The Forbidden Way By George Gibbs.

Circulars or Full Descriptions Sent on Request

35 West 32d St. D. APPLETON & COMPANY

New York

Among Important New Macmillan Books

HISTORY, TRAVEL AND DESCRIPTION

- AMS. Studies: Military and Diplomatic
  By CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS. Readable papers on points of military strategy and diplomatic history, arising in the United States between 1/75 and 1865.
- RGUSON. Hellenistic Athens. An Historical Essay

  By WILLIAM SCOTT FERGUSON, Assistant Professor of History, Harvard University. A general review of Athenian politics, literature, and public affairs from the death of Alexander to the sack of Athens by Sulla.
- The Soul of the Far East. By PERCIVAL LOWELL. A new, illustrated edition of the best interpretation of the Japanese spirit ever written.
- HNSON. Highways and Byways of the Great Lakes
  By CLIFTON JOHNSON. Uniform with the earlier volumes of informal, illustrated JOHNSON. American travel.
- Universities of the World By CHARLES F. THWING. All nations are here exhibited through their institu-tions for higher education—an interesting basis of comparison.
- DAWBARN. France and the French. By CHARLES DAWBARN. The most able and entertaining of recent records of personal study of the people of France, contrasting them with the English.
  - NA. Two Years Before the Mast
    By RICHARD HENRY DANA. It is wonderful how the ever-fresh spirit of adventure is strengthened by the vivid sea-pictures added by Charles Pears to this boys'

BIOGRAPHY, LETTERS AND REMINISCENCES

- RLEY. The Life of Gladstone
  Lord Morley's "great life of a great man" is here presented entire in two compact volumes, containing everything in the original three. MORLEY.
- The Record of an Adventurous Life H. M. HYNDMAN'S characteristically vigorous and outspoken comments on his varied career and many friendships. Among the personalities which appear are Mazzini, Marx, Meredith, Disraeli, Clemenceau, William Morris, and Randolph Churchill.
- HARRISON. Autobiographic Memoirs By FREDERIC HARRISON. The record of a long busy life which reflects capitally the shifting focus of public interest during the past half century.
- COLERIDGE—YARNALL. LERIDGE—YARNALL. Forty Years of Friendship
  A correspondence of unusual charm and meaning between Mr. ELLIS YARNALL and the late Lord Coleridge during the years 1856-1895. Edited by CHARLTON YARNALL.

ECONOMICS AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS

- USSIG. Principles of Economics

  By Professor F. W. TAUSSIG, Harvard University. A work which succeeds wonderfully in destroying the idea that economics is a dry, remote subject. It is the most TAUSSIG. practical, interesting reading a man can find.
- INES. Problems of Railway Regulation
  By HENRY S. HAINES. On the evolution of our railway system in relation to state and federal government.
- GOODNOW. Social Reform and the Constitution By Prof. FRANK J. GOODNOW, Columbia University

ANTHROPOLOGY

- The Mind of Primitive Man Discussions of Racial Prejudices, Environment, Heredity, Cultural Traits, etc., by DR. FRANZ BOAS, of Columbia University.
- The Golden Bough. Part III. The volume deals with The Dying God, the King of the Wood always slain by his successor.

PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION

- HODGES. Everyman's Religion By GEORGE HODGES, Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge.
- DE. Five Great Philosophies
  By WILLIAM DE WITT HYDE, President of Bowdoin College. HYDE.

Cloth, $2.50 net; by mail, $2.64. Just ready.

- Cloth, $4.00 net; by mail, $4.18.
- Illus., $1.60 net; by mail, $1.74.
- Illus., $2.00 net; by mail, $2.14. ..
- Illus., $2.25 net; by mail, $2.43.
- Cloth, $2.50 net; by mail, $2.64.
- Cloth, $2.00 net; by mail, $2.10.

New edition. $5.00 net.

- Cloth. $1.75 net: by mail, $1.88.
- In two volumes, portraits, $7.50
- net: carriage extra.
- Cloth, $3.00 net; by mail, $3.15.
- In two volumes. Cloth, $4.00 net; Carriage extra.
- Cloth, $1.75 net; by mail, $1.87.
- Cloth, $1.50 net; by mail, $1.64.

Cloth, $1.50 net; by mail, $1.61.

Cloth, $3.25 net; by mail, $3.38.

- Ready next week.
- Ready next week.

The Nation

The Week

Mr. Taft leaves San Francisco with his prestige visibly increased, we learn rains, the crowd is rather undemonstrative, and Taft stock breaks for a sharp decline. At Tacoma Mr. Taft greatly improves his standing by calling it Mt. Tacoma and not Mt. Rainier. In southern Idaho the President suffers from a sore throat and the outlook for 1912 loves me not" following each other in This would mean that Mr. Garfield was regular succession. In spite of the vola- there to keep in touch with the Progresmonths afterward, when the country however, it must be admitted that Mr. So long as women could vote only in has had time to appraise the President's Garfield bore himself as a thorough four Rocky Mountain States, of comrecord as a whole.

Monday's meeting of Progressive Republicans in Chicago seems to have been shunned by several Republican cial privilege," yet in the next breath from the New York Tribune's correspon- they add that "the present condition of dent. What a fickle thing must this uncertainty in business is intolerable Presidential prestige be which rises and and destructive of industrial prosperfalls like the thermometer, with the ity." The inference appears unavoidhas not known how to care for its own. Possibly, it has not been so entirely in to affirm!

That the Chicago meeting should have grows correspondingly gloomy. At San endorsed Senator La Follette for the Francisco he turns the first sod for the Presidency was a foregone conclusion. Panama Exposition and La Follette's His friends were in a great majority, chances dwindle to ridiculous propor- and they know exactly what they want. tions. A Presidential swing around the As much cannot be said for men in the circle thus assumes the character of an reputed attitude of ex-Secretary Garelaborate plucking at the petals of the field, who was understood to be on the daisy, with "He loves me" and "He ground in the interest of Mr. Roosevelt. cheerfully with the majority.

Senators and other leaders who had the passport controversy now under way inhabitants-not enough to make one been expected to be present, but it between this government and Russia is large city. Wyoming also allows wo went through its business directly and unmistakably on the right side, it does men the ballot, but that State is still promptly. The platform adopted suf- not matter that the reasoning by which more inconsiderable, its population in fers from the weakness of most political he approaches his position is completely 1910 being but 154,000. Of the two othplatforms in being conveniently vague, at variance with what he has recently er suffrage States of long standing, Utah It explicitly favors a Presidential pri- written concerning international dis-numbered but 373,000 people, while Colmary, but its programme of Trust leg- putes, national honor, and arbitration. orado's population was 799,000. It was islation seems to have been modelled Speaking of Russia's refusal to admit evidently a much more important event on the good old Republican planks about American citizens of the Jewish faith, when the State of Washington adopted protection-duties to protect the manu- Mr. Roosevelt asserts that "under no woman suffrage, for that commonwealth facturer, yet so adjusted as in no con- circumstances would we now make with had 1,141,000 residents in 1910. And ceivable way to injure the consumer. Russia or with any other Power a treaty now comes California, with a population Similarly, the Progressives are to make which explicitly permitted such dis- of 2,337,000, to join the ranks of the sufbig business "safe and stable," while at criminations as Russia actually makes frage States. This means nearly dou-

NEW YORE, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1911. interests of the public," At one point But if our feelings in the matter are so the drafters of the platform did not unmistakable, what sense is there in apwholly escape a logical pitfall. Their pealing to the Hague Tribunal, as Mr. movement, they assert, aims to "wrest Roosevelt suggests, for an authoritative the control of the government from spe-interpretation of our present treaty with Russia? Why does he not simply order the treaty to be abrogated?

As a matter of fact, it is still to be day and the hour. At Kansas City it able that special privilege in control shown that abrogation of the treaty of 1832 is necessary, in order to bring Russia to terms. The Czar's Government control as the Progressives, for the has taken no absolute stand in the matsake of campaign argument, feel bound ter, but has displayed to the full all the evasive and dilatory tactics of Oriental diplomacy. During the campaign of 1908, Mr. Taft gave his explicit pledge that Russia's refusal to recognize an American passport in the hands of a Jewish citizen should be promptly dealt with. Little evidence of zeal on the part of the State Department in this matter has so far been made apparent. A vigorous stand by our Government would bring the problem to a speedy solution.

The adoption by the male voters of tile nature of our democracy we do sive movement, to lay a restraining California last week of a Constitutionnot believe that the fortunes of a pub- hand upon it, and to prevent it from al amendment giving women the right lic man are made, unmade, and remade committing itself too definitely to the to vote is easily the most momentous within the space of a day or two. The fortunes of any man except the one decision yet given in this country in fa-Western trip will undoubtedly have its whose candidacy next year-nothing vor of woman suffrage. That must be effect upon Mr. Taft's political fortunes, said about 1916-would be a "genuine admitted as well by the opponents as but that effect will be visible only calamity." If all this was as reported, by the advocates of votes for women. Rooseveltian. That is to say, finding paratively small population, the movehimself in a small minority, he went ment to enlarge the political rights of their sex might be dismissed as almost negligible. Women could vote in Idaho, Inasmuch as Mr. Roosevelt's stand on to be sure, but Idaho had only 325,000 the same time "fully safeguarding the against certain classes of our citizens." bling at one stroke the number of women in the United States with the legal bution to mental comfort. From the repetition of the mob violence of a few right to vote.

The challenging of talesmen in the McNamara case on the score of their views concerning the conflict between labor and capital has a significance extending far beyond anything involved in the case itself. With the meagre details that have appeared in the dispatches, it is impossible at this moment to say on precisely what basis Mr. Darrow is placing his challenge; but if it rests on any such broad ground as that of mere hostility to the avowed aims and policies of trade unions, the granting of the challenge would constitute a precedent of alarming scope. The difficulty of obtaining a jury, on account of unlimited challenges allowed for socalled prejudice in regard to the individual case in hand, has been one of the notorious evils of our criminal procedure; if now a man's views on broad public questions are to be a bar to his eligibility as a juror, there is no telling where we shall stop. The question in the McNamara case is not a question of trades-unionism, but of murder. If a talesman has a fixed opinion that tradesunionists in general are ready to commit murder in promoting their cause, that would be a sound basis for a challenge on the part of the defence; as, on the other hand, if he holds that murder in that cause is justifiable, he would justly be excluded by the prosecution. But we have come to a strange pass if mere sympathy with the labor cause, or mere antipathy to it, is to be regarded as incapacitating a juryman from judging of the question of fact whether a given trades-unionist did or did not participate in a given act of violence, or from passing a true verdict upon him.

The advantages of Vice-President Sherman's plan of using up our resources as fast as we like and letting posterity do its own worrying, are evident. Economically, we should be vastly better off with the Guggenheims breaking their necks to serve us with the products of Alaska or any other unexploited region. A greater gain would be political. Who can estimate the increased prestige of President Taft at the incident that has brought Coatesthis moment if there had never been ville into its latest prominence is reany falling-out over the question of who markable, if not absolutely unique. The reasons for his decisions, Mr. Hill would should profit by our untouched and successful plea of a fifteen-year-old girl often command more authority for his therefore wasted wealth? Not the least victim for the legal punishment of the dicta if he refrained from explanatory of the merits of the plan is its contri- man who assaulted her, instead of a comment.

beginning, conservation has been a pecuto devise those inventions that give Mr. second time. The important thing is Sherman such anticipatory pleasure, that in this affair some one made a The question just who, at present, stand for law, and seven hundred excitshould control these resources he does ed men subsided. How much this is not appear to have considered. But why to be attributed to the flood of censure worry over that, either?

A faint suggestion of the kind of trouble with which both politics and business would be filled if the railway system of this country were to go into the possession of the Government is furnished by the suit of the Review of Reviews against the Postmaster-General of the United States and the postmaster of New York, asking for an injunction restraining them from enforcing the new postal regulation under which that magazine is to be carried by fast freight instead of on regular mail trains. The arrangements of the post office are of infantile simplicity in comparison with those of the railways, and the fact that the postal regulations have not, for the most part, brought about any serious complications between business and government is due entirely to the cast-iron uniformity of the few simple rules which govern the department's action. The moment a discrimination has to be made that is not absolutely mechanical, trouble begins. The part played by railway transportation in America, in the determination of prosperity or failure, not only for particular enterprises, but for whole communities, is something to which European conditions afford nothing like a parallel. With us government ownership would mean a tremendous plunge of politics into the deep waters of business.

Whatever allowances are to be made, weeks ago, may have been partly due to liarly harassing problem. Are we wrong other reasons than the plea itself. The in thinking that there are millions of interference of the State Constabulary Americans who will give a sigh of re- had prevented her father from carrying lief, now that they see how the whole out his threat to kill the man upon his matter can be dropped as safely as the arrest, and this time there was a Dis-Vice-President explains? Note also the trict Attorney who argued strenuously value of the idea for that posterity for orderly procedure. But it would be which it seemingly ignores. The less rash to assert that, if the girl herself we pass on to the future in the way of had taken a different tone, the commuresources, the more will it be spurred nity would not have been disgraced a that has poured upon the town since August 13, may be beyond reckoning, but it is significant that, almost from the beginning of the search for the assailant, members of the searching-party have been quoted as remarking that there must be no burning this time, owing to the talk it would cause outside.

> "There will be more idle men this winter than ever before" is the cheerful prophecy made by Mr. James J. Hill, as reported in the newspapers. His judgment may be correct, for aught we know; but it would be more impressive if the analysis of the causes of our troubles with which he accompanies his forecast hung together better. In the first place, he says:

> This is the reason: Our capacity for production along industrial lines has grown faster than our consumption along the same lines. Some years ago the farmer had to raise enough to feed himself and another man in the cities; now he must raise enough for himself and for two other men. on account of the movement to industry rather than farms.

> This is perfectly clean-cut, standing by itself; but Mr. Hill goes on:

> Business is sound, but no new enterprises are being started. The politicians and newspapers are to blame. There is too much political ghost dancing

Well, if we are already doing too much "along industrial lines," and if the trouble lies in "the movement to industry rather than farms," it is difficult to see that there is any great misfortune in a checking of the pace at which "new enterprises are being started." Like the judge who was warned never to give the vard University, rich as it is in so many other directions, has long been handicapped by a pitifully inadequate library building. It is unable to accommodate its readers, and many of its books are hidden away in cellars for lack of shelfroom. The stacks themselves have never furnished the accommodation needed by advanced classes, and with each year the conditions become less tolerable. Now a committee of architects has evolved an excellent plan for the construction of a new building on the present site, plus considerable additional ground and on the instalment basis. Thus the first section, to accommodate 834,000 volumes, can be built at a cost of $433,-400, and four other sections could be built thereafter to complete the whole structure. This is estimated to cost $1,953,000, and to give space for 2,370,-000 volumes. That such an opportunity to be of service to our oldest university has not yet appealed to her many wealthy graduates-to say nothing of the great giver of libraries-is really surprising. Only $2,500,000 is needed in all, for the college has sufficient funds available for maintenance if an endowment of $500,000 be added.

The new Lord Mayor of London, Sir Thomas Crosby, who was elected two weeks ago, is entitled to write M.D. after his name. He is said to be the first physician ever chosen as Lord Mayor. Sir Thomas is also in all probability 1877, so that the honor which has now law. come to him may be regarded as a fitting recognition of the public spirit which he has displayed. Of course, there will be many jokes about a doctor Lord Mayor's banquets will know noturtle soup which Disraeli said made all alike to their best interests. specting the tongue of the state." Sir is in some ways an addition to the may suffer and endure.

the head of her government.

recently passed upon, and it revealed a serious defect in the law creating the court, novel in British judicial procedure. A convicted murderer appealed on the ground that the jury in the court below had been improperly directed as to certain corroborative evidence. The judges on appeal found the plea to be well taken. Without asserting the innocence of the accused man-indeed, it is evident that they believe him guiltythe judges declare that they cannot be certain that the jury would have convicted him if it had not been misinformed as to the nature of part of the evidence against him. Hence the verdict was quashed; but now comes the surprising thing-the Court of Criminal Appeal is not able, under the law, to order a new trial! Over this lack of power, Justice Darling expressed sincere regret, saying that the court felt that the case was one in which it was eminently desirable that "all the facts should again be submitted to a jury with an adequate and proper direction." Justice Darling significantly added that he hoped that what the court said on this point would be "considered by those who had power to amend the law in this respect." One would think so! The right the oldest citizen ever elected to his of criminal appeal was established in present office, his age being eighty-one; England as a safeguard against possibut that, of course, is not so very old ble injustice to the innocent; it could for English public life. He has had a never have been intended to permit a long and distinguished medical career, man charged with atrocious crime to and has been in municipal service since escape by means of a loop-hole in the Then why have the Italian Government and people gone into this adventure? Because they are dominated by the old hypnotism of conquest, the mirage of the map, the old presiding over the City of London. Guar- illusion that some great national advantage antees will doubtless be offered that the will accrue from widened territory and increased political power; because the old catchwords and the old habits of political thing except pure food, and that the thought have blinded statesmen and people was once a Prime Minister of England thor of "The Great Illusion," explains any decisive overturn. That is the adwho was a doctor, and of him Lord the Italian attack upon Turkey. Mr. vantage of the Chinese system of decen-Rosebery wrote, in his Life of Pitt, that Angell derides the popular fallacy that tralized authority. Where a highly or-"Addington carried into politics the in- the capture of a province, instead of be- ganized governmental system might definable air of a village apothecary in- ing merely a change of administration, speedily go to pieces, inorganic China

Who wants to give a library? Har- Thomas Crosby, M.D., may as Lord wealth of the conquerors. He insists Mayor expose himself to a similar fling, that, "when we have conquered a terribut it need not be so bad a thing for tory, its wealth has to remain in the London to have an expert in hygiene at hands of its original owners; the conquerors get nothing. Conquest in the modern world is a process of multiply-In the new English Court of Crim- ing by X and then obtaining the original Appeal, the first capital case was inal resultant by dividing by X." It seems to us that Mr. Angell could strongly reinforce his point by demonstrating that the purchase of the Philippines has added nothing whatsoever to the wealth of this country, but has been a steady drag upon it by reason of the expense and burden of administration. We know that Washington bureaucrats have skilfully demonstrated, by means of trade figures, that we really have a credit balance to our account, but the ordinary man who thinks for himself will hardly be convinced that the Philippines have really added anything substantial to the wealth of the nation, or to its prestige, or brought us any trade we could not have obtained years ago by common-sense tariffs and business enterprise. The "mirage of the map" no longer deceives.

The task of suppressing the rebellion in the Yang-tse provinces has been entrusted to Yuan Shih Kai, the creator of China's modern army. The former Viceroy of Shan-tung is thus experiencing the usual treatment which China metes out to her strong men. Instead of utilizing their abilities in the permanent service of the Empire, the system at Peking demands that the really able men in China shall be held in reserve for the periodical crises that punctuate Government sloth and incompetence. If Yuan Shih Kai can live up, even in part, to the high expectations that were formed of him by European observers during the years following the close of the Russo-Japanese war, he should be able to cope with the present menacing situation. The first news that came out of China bore the impress of panic. With the passing of the early fright, the situation, though undoubtedly disquieting, is seen to be by no means hopeless. The rebellion may drag on or men brothers will not be "mock." There In these words Norman Angell, the au- even spread slowly, without bringing

WILSON ON TAFT AND TRUSTS.

With the Presidential nominating with exceptional importance. He is one of the two or three men from among whom the candidate of the Democratic party will almost certainly be chosen. Moreover, his emergence into the Presidential class has been so recent that, in spite of the extraordinary popularity he has attained, and of the enthusiasm some of his acts have evoked, the estimate of his qualities, in that thinking class which so often determines the final result of an electoral struggle, is still in the formative stage. Accordingly, when he thinks fit not only to pass a severe judgment on the course of the President of the United States in a leading department of governmental activity, but to give emphasis to his strictures by repeating them in a second speech on the following day, it becomes matter of real interest to inquire into the merits of the criticism.

Gov. Wilson's dissatisfaction appears to rest partly on alleged shortcomings of Mr. Taft, and partly on a much of a tremor and decides that what just how it can be done. he intended to do was wrong." In the less and certainly inaccurate, was, we ableness," but putting under the ban conventions only nine months off, the eral arraignment of the existing state public outgivings of a man in the posi- of our public policy in regard to Trusts; tion of Woodrow Wisson are invested it was meant rather to illustrate the natural consequence of an unsatisfactory method than to point to any special fault on the part of an individual. "The business man wants to know where he is," and "there has been nothing but guesswork for the last decade as to what is going to happen in business." No one will deny that there is some ground for such a complaint; nor will anybody deny the desirability of that which Mr. Wilson declares ought to be substituted for existing conditions:

> We want to put business on a sound basis and with the assurance that when we have done it we have not destroyed anything, but have reconstructed. We want definite information as to what the law means and what it provides. We don't know now what the offence is and what the penalty is.

So say we all of us. Business on a sound basis, the law made as plain as the multiplication table, many things reconstructed but nothing destroyedwhat could be finer? Surely, Mr. Taft cannot harbor any desire to stand in the by the death of Judge Harlan help layway of a consummation so devoutly to men to understand why lawyers regard condition of much longer standing than be wished. Surely, the eight Justices an appointment to the Supreme Court the present Administration. "President of the Supreme Court who concurred in of the United States as the blue ribbon Taft," so runs the report of Mr. Wilson's the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust de of the profession. It is not, of course, a speech, "says one day that he is absocisions must approve such an aim. So question of money rewards; these are to lutely going to enforce the Sherman far as we know, the only thing that be looked for elsewhere. The statement law. After reading the papers, however, stands in the way of its complete at- is made that Judge Harlan, even after he thinks perhaps he has excited too tainment is the difficulty of discovering a judicial service of more than thirty dent, however, though apparently care- taking no account of degree or "reason- essary to speak of the dignity or emolu-have no doubt, but incidental to his gen- every business arrangement that sins against the letter of the law. Mr. Wilson is not for the first of these policies, for he says that "the people of the country have made up their mind that they won't stand for monopoly and restraint of trade"; is he for Judge Harlan's root-and-branch plan? If he is, does he think that it will put business on a sound basis, reconstructing much but destroying notning? And if neither of these two simple solutions satisfies his mind, what does he propose himself? We have no doubt that he has thought a great deal on the subject: but we would suggest, in all friendliness, that when a man of his antecedents attacks a question so vast and so complex as this of the control of business combinations, the country has a right to look for something more than mere general denunciation on the one hand and the utterance of a counsel of perfection on the

SUPREME COURT TIMBER.

Such tributes as have been called forth years, leaves but a small estate. For a If Gov. Wilson had given us the bene- large part of the time that he was on heat of a campaign, such a statement on fit of such a discovery, the question of the bench, he was clearly underpaid. the hustings might be quite pardonable; the accuracy, or even the justice, of his Salaries of Federal judges have recentin the quiet atmosphere of the univer- critical remarks would become entirely ly been somewhat increased, yet are sity of which he was recently the head, trivial. But in the published reports of still smaller than they should be. But and in these serene October days of an his speeches there is no sign of such an the opportunity and the distinction "off-year," it is not the sort of thing the achievement. He tells us that we are in a which the Supreme Court offers have alfriends of Woodrow Wilson have a right sad mess, and he leaves us in it. There ways been rightly regarded as indepento expect from him. If President Taft are, indeed, before the public, two pro- dent of anything pecuniary. What they has been wabbling in any such way, has posed solutions of the problem, each of are we see illustrated in Justice Harlan. been making any declaration on the them having the unquestionable merit They are an appeal to the noblest ambi-Trust question which he has afterwards of extreme simplicity, whatever may be tion. To be able to spend years in studyretracted on account of the "tremor" said of them in other respects. One is ing and applying the principles of the that it has excited, if he has been indi- the solution of the out and out Trust ad- supreme law of the land, and in doing cating any act that "he intended to do" vocates, who say that all the Govern- one's part to uphold the honorable train relation to the Sherman law and has ment ought to do in regard to the prob- dition whereby the decisions of our afterwards decided that it "was wrong," lem of combination and monopoly is to highest court are made continuous and the fact has wholly escaped our ob- let it alone; business knows best what yet responsive to public needs as these servation. . If Gov. Wilson has caught is good for it, and what is good for busi- arise; to be animated by the sole desire him in such performances, he ought to ness is good for the country. The other to dc justice, and, in doing it, to make be able to furnish a bill of particulars. is Judge Harlan's solution: apply the the country safe and strong-when all Mr. Wilson's criticism of the Presi- Sherman law in the most sweeping way, this has been considered, it is not necments of the Supreme Court in order should burn in the lantern with which THE TOBACCO TRUST DISSOLUTION.

Washington. It might be regarded by demanded of a Supreme Court judge. some as almost a special Providence Legal attainments and character nattime to be his duty, he himself would age is important. A judge going to the have been a Supreme Court judge. In Supreme Court ought to have a reasonthat court it is now to be presumed able expectation of twenty years' serhe will never sit; yet he certainly will vice. Hence he should be not much if be entitled to the satisfaction of know- any above fifty. President Taft disreing that his mark will long remain writ- garded this good rule in the case of ten upon it.

the newspapers; names are suggested, and the principles upon which he should go in making his selection are indicated. It is said that he must pay great heed to locality, choosing the new judge from the "right" Circuit or section. Political considerations are frankly put forward: it might be good tactics for the President to appoint a justice who should be pleasing to the Progressives. Some argue that, a Republican having been named to succeed the late Chief Justice Fuller, a Democrat should now make sure of are that he is duly learned be named to follow Judge Harlan. A in the law, that his repute is of the best, dozen other hints or recommendations and that he promises to be resolute in are given the President—all of which he all things to bear himself "as becometh should, in our opinion, entirely disre- a judge." gard; and it is probable that he will.

The search for a fit man to go upon the Supreme Court bench may be long and difficult, but about the light which to understand why any member of the he is looked for there need be no doubt American bar should feel that the offer whatever. Arguments from locality of a position in that court is the high- ought to have little weight. It is, inest honor that can possibly come to him. deed, tentatively desirable that each of The death of Judge Harlan heightens the Circuits should be represented; and the already sufficiently remarkable part if a candidate, otherwise admirably which President Taft has had in re-con- qualified, should chance to live in a Cirstituting the Supreme Court. Within cuit now without a judge, that would the first half of his term in the Presi- be one thing more in his favor. But dency it fell to him to appoint four as- Presidents have frequently set aside sociate justices, and to name the Chief such considerations of residence, and Justice; and now, with the choice of a there is no reason why Mr. Taft should successor to Judge Harlan, Mr. Taft be swayed by them. Politics should be will actually have selected a majority of wholly left out of the question. The the Supreme Court. This is unexampled task of the appointing officer is merely since the original nomination of the first to discover the man who, on the whole, Supreme Court of the United States by appears to be best fitted to do the work that this re-manning of our highest urally stand first in the list of qualificourt should have devolved upon a Prescations. Judicial experience is, of ident who had himself been a Federal course, reckoned of high value, but it is judge, and whose veneration for the Su- not indispensable. A man may have emipreme Court he has manifested on so nently the judicial mind without ever many occasions and in so many ways. If having been a judge. Such was the case Mr. Taft could have followed his own with Justice Miller, long an ornament preference, instead of what he felt at the of the Supreme Court. The question of Judge Lurton, but allowed it to be un-There is no probability that the Pres-derstood that he would not do so again. ident will designate a judge to succeed Another point relates to the recorded ju-Harlan until Congress meets. He may dicial opinions of a possible nominee, or not be ready with a nomination even in to the positions he may have taken re-December. A great deal of advice, how- specting questions of corporation conever, is already showered upon him in trol, and so on. Now, of course, a President could not overlook the disqualification which would go with extreme views expressed by a judge on one side or the other, but, short of that, this is a matter into which it is not needful or desirable too nicely to inquire. If a man has shown himself to be a good judge-able, industrious, incorruptible, high-minded, justice-loving-it may be just as well that his opinions about the anti-Trust law, for example, are not specifically known. The main things to

The Supreme Court decisions of last May, ordering dissolution of the Oil and Tobacco Trusts, left a weighty problem still to be settled-how these two aggregations of competing corporations, upder the ownership of the two central holding companies, should be distributed on a new basis of ownership. Of the two combinations, the American Tobacco was much the more intricate. The plan of distribution drawn up by the Tobacco company is about to come before the court. In brief, its proposed basis of dissolution as stated by its lawyers is:

To restore lawful conditions by dividing the business in tobacco and related products, heretofore dominated and controlled by the American Tobacco Company, or companies in which it has held a large or controlling interest, among fourteen separate and independent companies, no one of them having control of or dominance in the trade as to any of the products manufactured by it.

In advance of the hearings before the court, we shall express no opinion as to the merits of this plan, from the standpoint of the varying interests and equities of the Tobacco Trust's security-holders. But there is one aspect of the matter which has already taken a foremost place in public discussion, and which bears, not only on the Tobacco reorganization, but on all others of similar character. This consideration the committee of the National Cigar Leaf Association, representing independent manufacturers, has set forth as fol-

Any plan of dissolution which leaves the effective control of the separate parts of the combination in the hands of the same small group of individuals who now control the present solidified combination, cannot bring about a restoration of competition. The result would be that the last condition would be worse than the first, because after such a dissolution the same control would continue to be exercised as before, with the added advantage that it would have . . . the sanction of the courts.

Obviously, this means that if one man or one group of men had held a controlling interest in the stock of the holding company, they ought not, after the dissolution, to be allowed to hold a pro rata control in the released subsidiaries. Two questions are involved in such an argument: one, whether such a resultant situation would be repugnant to the Anti-Trust law; the other, whether disintegration on such basis would leave the conditions in the trade as obnoxious to public policy as they were before. As regards the first question, we are not without guidance in previous court opinions. When the Northern Securities combination was ordered dissolved by the Federal courts in 1904, its management proposed and its shareholders ratifled a pro rata distribution, to Northern Securities shareholders, of the shares of the two competing railways owned by the holding company. This plan was contested by the Harriman interests, who alleged in their petition for injunction that "the plan proposed . . would leave control in the hands of the same people who now control, and would defeat the ruling of the Supreme Court." In so far as the Hill-Morgan interest had controlled the holding company, and would, on pro rata distribution of its assets, continue to control the competitive Northern Pacific and Great Northern railways, ownership after liquidation would apparently have been as alleged.

Nevertheless, the Circuit Court which had ordered the Northern Securities dissolution, and before which the injunction suit was argued, unanimously refused to intervene. Its reason was that, according to well-established rules, such petition on grounds of public policy could not be entertained "so long as the Government is present by its Attorney-General, and expresses its disapproval of such intrusion." It intimated, however, that a hearing might be allowed in a suit on the question whether certain interests were unfairly treated by the plan, introduced with witnesses and evidence; and three months later, as a result of fresh petition and argument, Judge Bradford of the Federal District Court granted at Trenton a preliminary injunction against the pro rata plan. But in January, 1905, the Circuit Court, having heard argument on appeal, disthe Supreme Court upheld its action. the gist of the decision being that "the shares allotted in dissolution of the liberties from being ground under the title to these stocks having intentional- Trust or through subsequent purchase German heel, are as various as they are ly been passed, the former owners, or for investment. Counsel for one of the desperate and amusing. A few years ago, part of them, cannot reclaim the specific shares, and must be content with their ratable proportion of the corporate asnote."

of securities to the original owners from whom that company purchased them. Indeed, such a proposition, baldly stated, hardly conforms to common sense. Mr. James J. Hill quite aptly suggested, of that proposal in the Northern Securities case, that "one might as well go to a bank and demand a return of exactly the same money that one had deposited there." Beyond even this, it is certain that, taken as a whole, the present holders of Tobacco securities are not the parties from whom the Trust originally bought the stock of the smaller companies.

All this undoubtedly leaves open the large question whether pro rata distribution of the Tobacco Trust's assets would or would not continue the trade domination and the monopolistic tendencies as they were before, supposing the same investors who controlled the Trust to receive and hold a similar working ownership in the released subsidiaries. Our own answer to this question would be that the resultant situation, even then, would differ radically from what it was in the days of Trust control. The purpose of the holding company was to prevent for all time exactly what would now be again a normal probability-change of ownership in the old-time constituents of the Trust, whether through death, or through individual sales, or through purchase of a dominating interest in the smaller companies by people who could never have aspired to obtain a footing in the $119,-000,000 combination.

It must be remembered that whoever controls these companies hereafter, their subject to the law. Not least of all, it is have disappeared when first the armed pertinent to ask just how we are to missed the injunction suit, and in April prevent such private control of several The shifts to which. Imperial Britain separate companies, whether through independent companies suggested, in a England was to be saved by rifle clubs. published interview of Monday morning, Later, she was to be saved by boythat this could be done "by compelling scouts. To-day, she is to be saved by a this coterie of insiders to dispose of device that comes straight from Aris-Now, no two cases of this sort run on their stock to others not in any way tophanes. That staid, conservative Lonall fours with each other; but the legal connected with themselves, and by per- don journal, the Standard, prints a letpoints at issue in the Tobacco Trust and petually enjoining them from re-acquir- ter which shows how England is to be Northern Securities situation are preting it, or from resuming control of any kept from destruction, by her women. ty close. The Supreme Court decision of the companies, or from interfering In the first place, all marriageable Engof April, 1905, appears at all events to with the tobacco industry." We must lishwomen are to shame into action the dispose of a conceivable demand for re- confess that this would be a highly flannelled fools at the wicket and the turn of the Tobacco company's holdings novel and formidable undertaking.

BRITISH HYSTERIA.

Imperial fashion notes from London for the approaching season indicate that sackcloth and ashes will continue to be worn extensively in the United Kingdom and its dependencies. The sun is not the only thing that nowadays refuses to set upon the British Empire. The sun has a close rival in the panics and alarums and excursions which during the last half-dozen years have traversed the British horizon in unbroken continuity. The fear of invasion has ceased to be an emotion, and has become to sensible people an intolerable bore. It is impossible nowadays to escape the lesson of Imperial duty. It pops out upon Englishmen from political discourses, from drapers' advertisements, from directors' meetings, and from funeral orations. Worst of all, it has entered literature. Kipling's words of warning have been seized upon by the single ladies in parsonages who write novels and memoirs for the great British public. In the midst of the tenderest passages we are reminded that Britain's womanhood can never know the bliss of untroubled love until all possibility of a German landing in Yorkshire is removed. And it is not the fourth-raters who are writing this stuff. Conan Doyle has done almost as badly, and there are others.

What, then, has become of the British sense of humor? Punch still appears in print; Lord Rosebery still flashes his rare epigrams; Mr. Chesterton writes faster than ever. Humor as an isolated function presumably still exists in England, but as applied to the practice of actions, joint or several, will still remain life the sense of the comic seems to spectre loomed up across the North Sea. finds herself put, in order to save her muddied oafs at the goal, by taking a vow of celibacy for a period of five years, in which wealthy Unionist M.Ps.'s have church which have come down the cen-"or until such a time as England shall be placed in a posture of defence commensurate with its wealth and responsibilities and worthy of its history." And secondly, the women of England are to be organized into an "army of home defence." Visitors who have stood shaken before the "Quand Même" in the gardens of the Tuileries will now realize by taking thought, be rendered ridiculous.

Now, British hysteria, in spite of its comic aspects, might have come in for something of that respect which attaches to sincerity, even when it is misguided. But with Great Britain to-day the lack the wailings of a beaten political party. Imagine that the Conservatives and not the Liberals had been in power for the last half-dozen years. The lessons of the South African war might have been learned, but there would have been cominvasions, and the failure of Britain's manhood, and approaching Imperial col-Mr. Asquith's job, Tory confidence would have been what it has always been, a fine faith in England's destiny, manhood, pluck, and luck. The methods of "somehow" by which the British Empire was built up would still have found defenders. It is only when Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George took hold that decadence sets in and the storms refuse the sea-girt isle the protection they have hitherto vouchsafed her. British panic is to be interpreted in the light of the fact that the middle classes which write and read newspapers and books are strongly anti-Liberal.

Decadence to-day is not with Engbut very vulgar gentlemen. The manner greater dignity, in those hymns of the scem to be aware. An uplifting hymn is ment of members of Parliament is atro- with precious associations. If worshipciously vulgar. The manner in which ping congregations desire to lift their Unionist Ulster rages against Home hearts in contemplation of the heavenly Rule and threatens civil war, death, hope, what better can they do than use and damnation apparently shows that one of the hymns of Bernard? For ex-Englishmen have forgotten how to be ample: cheerful losers. It would be interesting to see within how many weeks after a that there is no situation which cannot, Tory Ministry came into office British decadence would be completely checked, Or again: and the Empire put well on its feet vapid. But in the Baptist church at tunes, simply on the plea of novelty? Tarrytown which Mr. Rockefeller atgo on devoutly singing:

Somewhere, somewhere, Beautiful isle of somewhere, Land of the true, where we live anew, Beautiful isle of somewhere.

We would not treat the matter flipland's frenzied footballers in corduroy pantly, though the thing certainly inand peaked cap, but with England's rul- vites ridicule. To many good people, ing class. What has become of the poise no doubt, the subject appears sacred. and the dignity and the sense of fair- They think of this "somewhere" hymn, play that were the hallmark of the Eng- and others like it, as somehow bound lish gentleman? They seem to have been up with their religious faith. To them thrown overboard in the vehemence of it represents the aspiration for immorparty-strife. Waterloo may have been tality. The "Beautiful Isle" they vaguewon on the cricket-fields of Eton, but ly suppose to mean Heaven, and to well-born Englishmen have latterly been typify that rest which remaineth for resorting to tactics that are distinctly the people of God. Against that we have not "cricket." The men who howled nothing to say; but would merely ask if down Mr. Asquith in the House of Com- the same pious idealism is not express- hymnology in our churches is one of mons were not vulgar football players, ed with equal intensity, and with far much more importance than some people exploited the new provision for the pay. turies, and are now richly freighted

Jerusalem the glorious, The glory of the elect, O, dear and future vision That eager hearts expect!

They stand, those halls of Zion, Conjubilant with song: And bright with many an angel, With many a martyr-throng.

WEEDING OUT THE HYMN-BOOKS. The sentiment is far more inspiring. Gov. Wilson's quiet protest, a few days and its verbal expression infinitely more of sincerity is strongly apparent. Not ago, against the use of silly hymns had worthy, than in the case of the rubbishy patriotism, but party-politics, is at the a remarkable sequel. The Governor spe-modern improvisations which some atbottom; it is not national hysteria, but cifically objected to "Beautiful Isle of tempt to substitute. When we have Somewhere," which had just been sung hymns of lofty words wedded to noble in his presence, pointing out that its music, why should they be displaced by language was mushy and its sentiment nonsensical compositions, with catchy

As a matter of fact, there is a movetends, the pastor triumphantly refuted ment in several churches, as we are glad paratively little talk of decadence, and Gov. Wilson. He did it by himself sing- to note, to revise their hymn-books. The ing the hymn as a solo, and then ask- plan is to exercise a severer taste than ing the congregation to say whether formerly in deciding what shall be allapse. If Mr. Balfour were now holding they liked it or not. "All in the church lowed to hold a place in them. Some except one aged woman raised their years ago the tendency was to make hands" to signify that the hymn was hymn-books encyclopædic. Rival comvery much to their mind. It is hard to pilers strove to see which collection get around such a canon of good taste could be made the larger. The result fixed by popular vote. Mr. Rockefeller was such a huge array of good, bad, and added his own high literary authority indifferent as used to be found in earlier to the approval of the hymn, so that we editions of "Songs for the Sanctuary." cannot deny that those who like this But the inevitable reaction set in, and sort of hymn will find this one exactly we have since had volume after volume the sort of hymn they like. They will showing a more exacting selection. The later aim has been not to see how many hymns could be got together, but how much useless lumber-or how much actual doggerel verse-could be left out. An instance of the better method is "The University Hymn-Book," in which the collection is comparatively small but choice. Surely, if we are told to listen to the solemn voice of the church's unending song, we are entitled to hear something not so offensive to every right standard of taste or religious feel-

> Somewhere the sun is shining, Somewhere the songbirds dwell; Hush, then, thy sad repining, God lives and all is well.

The whole question of an inspiring church service can make. To many it remains a tie of attachment to religious worship after most others have snapped. A sermon they will sit out much in the spirit of Tennyson's Yorkshire farmer, or will find that interest in it which George Eliot remarked to be so common-the interest of the audience when the sermon is finally done. Even praying in the churches may easily become with some a wearisome form. With Lowell, they may come to feel dissatisfaction with the "drony vacuum of compulsory prayer." But a noble hymn, borne up by the voice of the great congregation, retains its power to warm and even thrill many hearts that have ceased to respond to other religious appeals. The conclusion is obvious that the church cannot afford in any way to weaken or sacrifice this potent form of influence. To weed out transitory and tawdry matter from the hymn-books is to do much to preserve not only the dignity, but the stirring power of religious services. In this matter the moderns cannot boast of an advance. With so few even tolerable hymns written in recent years, we had better stick to the voices that carry us of Parliamentary honors proffered to us from the Middle Ages. Fancy a him but thrust aside for higher rewards; worshipper of the tourteenth century asked to join in singing "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," after having been accustomed to hear organ and choir roll out the majestic:

Veni, pater pauperum. Veni, dator munerum, Veni, lumen cordium.

THE LIFE OF A LAUREATE.

I.

In a day when ancient manuscripts are opened and made to yield up misprized and forgotten geniuses, it is singular that no one seems to have discovered Alfred Austin. Fortune, who deals inscrutably with the reputations of poets, has apportioned him a unique destiny. To some she has given merit without fame; to others, fame without merit: to him alone, fame without being read. Both before and after he entered upon the laureateship, his works were regarded as inessential to salvation. But upon his assumption of the singing robes of Lord Tennyson, he stepped at one conspicuous stride into the hot sunlight of journalistic derision. His own long participation in Conservative journalism as leader-writer for the Standard contributed to the acrimonious hilarity of his reception. Liberal knives hitherto exercised against his politics hitherto exercised against his politics ... *The Autobiography of Alfred Austin, 1835-were now for the first time fleshed in 1910. New York: The Macmillan Co. 87.50 net.

for the nonce literary critics, collected and reprinted all the hasty and unfiled lines in the lays of the "hysterical Helot of Imperialism." The merciless cartoonist elevated him to the ancient throne of Dulness and twined the Parnassian laurels about his girdle. The wits of the press undertook to commit him with his peers, sagely debating whether to lodge him by copious Southbid Shadwell lie a shade nearer Mc-Flecknoe and make room for the newcomer by Colley Cibber. His name has thus become a household allusion; his works-who has read them? Here was surely a porridge to have killed a stouter poet than the Quarterly's martyr.

Mr. Austin is different; at seventysix he is still apparently as hale, happy, and industrious as ever. Within a twelvementh he has composed his memoirs,* now given to the world in two volumes comprising some six hundred pages written with unflagging zest and genuine power in self-revelation. All became his own biographer, as he became his own poet, on the principle that if one would have a thing done well one should do it one's self. His selfcomplacency appears in the record of his influence with political leadin his words to young writers on the secrets of style; in his hints for future pilgrims to Italian shrines consecrated by his verse; and, above all, in the account-since Wordsworth's "Prelude," unequalled in minuteness and Laureate's character. They are startling self-reverence-of his own poetical development.

His early satirical poem entitled "The spite of the faults of irresponsible youth, "the germ of what Matthew be gathered from one's works in their entirety." (A peculiar substitution of literary, social, and political group. Mr. "one" for "I" is a "note" of Mr. Austin's Austin, though he wots it not, is the style.) From this germ, he traces with retrospective, brooding, and affectionate finger the movement-ofttimes uncon magnified by the support of the landed scious-of his poetical powers toward that far-off, divine event, his master. fancies, dipping his pen into the shalpiece, "The Human Tragedy." Pointing low well of egotism, but into the inout that Italy cradled, though England exhaustible springs of English sentibore, his poetry, he declares that his ment. We can make no sound valuation Italian sojournings "stripped" him "of that insularity of familiar knowledge that marks so much of English literature." Recalling early days in Rome, he speaks with wonder of his unawareness of the divine things then a-brew-

I little knew that "The Human Tragedy, not to come fully and finally to the birth till more than ten years later, was already one of the most moving appeals which a his poetry. Little Englanders, become germinating, and was waiting only for the simultaneous occurrence of the mighty European events between the years 1866 and 1871 and the much-needed expansion of my own mind.

> This Little-did-I-wot runs like a silver thread throughout theautobiography. Mr. Austin is the most spontaneous of poets. This sense of cosmic gestation, then carried so blithely, but almost oppressive in the retrospect, reminds us of ey or elegant James Pye, or whether to Eckermann and Goethe marvelling together over the genesis of "Faust." And sure enough, a few lines later, Mr. Austin adds in the benevolent tone which he adopts toward his period of poetic adolescence: "But, as Goethe said. 'No youth can be a master,' and one was young." His appreciation of his own poetry-nowhere deficient in delicacy-reaches its tenderest expression in his comment on certain villages in northern Italy once visited by him: "Suppressing their less attractive features, imaginative memory transfigured them later in the grave, sad journey of Godfrid and Olympia to Milan from the the evidence indicates that Mr. Austin little chapel in Spiaggiascura, that closes with the melancholy line, > > Ah! life is sad, and scarcely worth the nain.

This is, indeed, a melancholy line, but though it illustrates Mr. Austin's sympaers; in the glimpse that he offers thetic imagination and his power over the sententious poetic phrase, it by no means represents his criticism of life. As I have already intimated, a divine satisfaction with his own position, a bland unconsciousness of contemporary feeling and opinion—these are precisely the startling and notable traits of the because at first view one cannot see what supports them. They are notable because, as one considers the pages of this Season" contains, he tells us, in autobiography, one sees exactly what supports them. One perceives that these traits are not mere personal idiosyncra-Arnold called 'the criticism of life' to sies, but the traditional and distinguishing marks of a diminishing but dogged last minstrel of Toryism. As he writes, he feels himself soothed, sustained, and gentlemen of England. He is not, he of his poetry without some consideration of the origin and nature of his ideas.

II.

Like Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford. who first made him conscious that he was a poet, and like Lord Byron of Newstead Abbey, whose verse and romantic pilgrimage he has imitated in "The Human Tragedy"-though without passion, rebellion, wit, or diablerie -Mr. Austin is a great respecter of fam-ample enlargement upon his intimacy with baronets and lords, we can easily credit his declaration that "no one easy gradations of English society. from class to class, more than I This feeling, eminently becoming to an official singer to the royal household, is apparent in his treatment of his own lineage. Born of Roman Catholic parents in this best possible of worlds six years after the Catholic Emancipation Act, Mr. Austin is would regard as comfortable aristocratic stock, his family for three generations before him having dealt in wool. And yet with a peculiarly Victorian instinct for adorning whatever he touches. he contrives to cast an additional glamour over his family-tree. Though he does not attempt to follow his physical ancestry beyond his great-grandfather. he shows at any rate-with the aid of "Chambers's Encyclopædia"-that the "honorable trade of Wool-stapling" flourished as early as the time of Edward III; and he has himself seen houses of "striking architectural beauty" which belonged to wool-staplers "in the days of the Plantagenets." Furthermore, as he playfully reminds us, Shakespeare's father was a wool-stapler; Dante belonger to the Guild of the Woolcombers. So much for his main inheritance in the paternal line. The blood of the Austins, conspiring with Shakespeare, Dante, and the Guild of the Woolcombers, determined that he should be a poet.

The special character of his poetry. however, appears to have been strongly influenced by the Hutton strain which came to him through his grandmother. Close attention will be required here, for heredity is a slippery matter at the best, and the argument runs at this point through a narrow defile: Mr. Austin "seems to remember that there existed a floating tradition that the Huttons had at one time been among the landed gentry." Skeptical biologists may cry out that land is an acquired non-transmissible characteristic. Socialists-of which sect there were none in the England of the elder Huttons, merry England, the real England, the England of Mr. Austin-socialists are said to hold similar views. The incontestable fact remains that Mr. Austin received from the Huttons, or from somewhere, an impulse inclining him affectionately toward land, and land in large parcels. From childhood, he tells us, he has experienced "a passionate clinging to the country, a keen admiration of territorial homes, with their deer-parks and wide-stretching woodlands, and an unconquerable antipathy, of a most prejudiced character, to towns, mills, and manufactures." At first thought the unwary reader may suspect | Peep soft at my mate-she is there below- declared that the nations were hurtling

ily. On the bases of his trivial men- a conflict between the hereditary Austin tion of literary contemporaries and his instinct for commerce and the Hutton impulse toward the serene life of the landed gentry. But wool-stapling as well as the business of owning land, we are admires honorable descent and the assured, was in the time of the poet's childhood "a singularly light occupation," with ample margins for a nine o'clock breakfast and a half hour's lingering before business among "the flowers, the poultry, and the pigeons."

III.

In such a mould heredity cast him. "Qualis ab incepto," says Mr. Austin; as he was in the beginning, so essenderived from what every American tially he has remained, except that he has relinquished the Roman faith which was not quite English. He came into the world with a few strong innate ideas. and has neither discarded nor added many since. Pigeons, poultry, and flowers surrounding a territorial home with background and foreground of deer-park and wide-spreading woodland-these constitute his central conception of nature. These things the Laureate has ble yow? sung with sweetness and sincerity, both in prose and in verse-in "Veronica's Garden," "Haunts of Ancient Peace," and in many a lyric, vernal, æstival, autumnal, and hibernal. None but a resolutely incredulous critic would question his knowledge of English seasons; and, in spite of his deprecatory "such gardening knowledge as I may later have acquired"-cf. Professor Saintsbury's "If-I-have-any-skill-in-criticism"there is no reason for doubting his intimate acquaintance with English flowers. If poetry avails at all in these evil days his songs must have done something toward keeping alive a love of territorial homes in the hearts of their owners. Nor has Mr. Austin confined himself to groves and gardens. He has sung also of man and especially of woman-the occupants of territorial homes, and of all the prejudices and sentiments that uphold and beautify them.

Though not a poet of wide-ranging cassion, he has given their due to English love, courtship, and marriage. Summing up at the close of his first chapter, the forces that most moved his childhood, he mentions "a dim sense of the magnetic differences of the sexes." The maturer phase of this sense and its important place in Mr. Austin's work are symbolically adumbrated in the poem called "In the Heart of the Forest." The poet, accosting the shrilling misselthrush, inquires the meaning of his music:

Then louder, still louder he shrilled: I sing For the pleasure and pride of shrilling, For the sheen and the sap and the showers of spring That fill me to overfilling,

Yet a something deeper than Springtime, though

It is Spring-like, my throat keeps flooding:

Where the bramble trails are budding. She sits on the nest and she never stirs; She is true to the trust I gave her;

And what were my love if I cheered not hers

As long as my throat can quaver.

In this shy lyric, Mr. Austin hints darkly at the true solution of the vexed woman question. Fortunately, I am able to illuminate this matter by a gloss extracted from the series of articles which he contributed to the Spectator in 1894. reporting his researches through England for "haunts of ancient peace." One of these haunts was the household of the fourth Countess of Leicester:

In the church at Penshurst, where we abode that night, there is a monument to the fourth Countess of Leicester, and on it is recorded, presumably in obedience to her own wish [my italies], that "Her sole desire was to make a good wife and good mother." Could there be a nobler ambition? And shall I be forgiven if I add that when the little "emancipating" hubbub of our day has subsided, the ineradicable instinct of women will re-echo that devout and hum-

In the seventeen years since these lines were written the "little 'emancipating' hubbub" does not seem to have subsided much. While Mr. Austin was penning the pages of his autobiography, young women wearing a bandeau inserted with the motto "Votes for Women" were parading in Piccadilly. The tumult, however, has not reached the Laureate among the primroses and lady-smocks of Swinford Old Manor. While we who do not live in territorial homes have been asking, "this so t les neiges d'antan!-where are the wives who sit on the nest and never stir?" he has sung on imperturbably, celebrating the Lucille, the Dora, the Maud of the mid-Victorian dream.

The remote charm that invests Mr. Austin's conception of the eternal-feminine pervades also his picture of man in family relations—a picture which helps us, since the family is a little image of the state, to understand his political ideals. To men of the modern democratic way of thinking, marriage exists in order to give representation to the Opposition. When a man marries, as we view the matter, he grants voice and vote to his sharpest and most remorseless critic. And this concession, most of us are agreed, whatever difficulties may attend it, is good for the government. To Mr. Austin, on the other hand, ideal marriage means a man's quiet and unchallenged assumption of the domestic throne of his fathers and his mild paternal reign over devoted and adoring subjects.

Now the nimbus as a domestic ornament is no more hopelessly out of date than the whole social and political order which Mr. Austin has celebrated. In 1790, Burke saw it already in the last ditch; because it was no more, Carlyle pell-mell into the Pit; Ruskin loved it of conservatism with Toryism-a confu- ginia Poe," XII, 129 f.). I am aware that Austin to declare that it has not been and never shall be shaken. His present attitude toward internal affairs may be suggested by the postscript to a letter of his to the Times which he has deemed worthy a place near the close of his autobiography. The sentiment, endorsed by Mr. Austin, was originally uttered by the Comte d'Haussonville, nephew of the Duc de Broglie, and friend of the Duc d'Aumale, "and whose reception by the Académie Française I had the good fortune to attend, taken there by the late Lord Lytton, when English Ambassador in Paris." etc. Here is the sentiment:

The speeches of members of the House of Lords during the Election, so superior, even as platform oratory, to those delivered by the members of the House of Commons with one or two exceptions, would alone suffice to save from successful attack any assault upon its existence.

With democracy long since triumphant, with socialism on foot, while dynamite is laid in broad daylight under the House of Lords, Mr. Austin still confronts the times with comfortable mien and inquires whether we shall exchange for a modern democracy without a throne, with no towers, with "mean plots without a tree" [small holdings cultivated by the owners?], a "herd of hinds, too equal to be free," dwelling together in "greed, jealousy, envy, hate, and all uncharity"-shall the gentlemen of England barter for this, he asks, our ancient, unaltered Motherland, "where sweet Order now breathes cadenced tone," with its lambs going "safe to the ewes" and its "calves to the udder," its "whistling yokels" guiding the "gleaming share" hard by the home where "gentle lordship dwells"? Shall this exchange be made?" cries the Laureate in feigned and rhetorical consternation. "Banish the fear!" he replies in his poems called "Why England is Conservative," "Look Seaward, Sentinel," and in many another patriotic lay of unique and incomparable insolence. While the "wildbeast mob" of the nations whine with envy at her peace and prosperity, or, roa.ing and sweating under their armor, menace her across the "bastions of the brine," she towers and shall forever tower supreme, "victor without a blow," "smilingly leaning" on her "undrawn sword."

I have made this review of Mr. Austin's leading ideas because it has been falsely rumored that he has none. It should now be apparent that, far from being content with the fame of an idle pastoralist, he challenges recognition as a poetical representative of the conservative spirit. It should also be clear still with a passionate regret as an exile sion due to his obliviousness to the flight in a strange land. It remained for Mr. of time. I suppose it is more or less of the essence of genuine Toryism to confound the amenity and stability of one's own fireside with the welfare of the country; in so far as that is true, Mr. Austin seems to be a good Tory. In his system of ideas, furthermore, I can detect little that would have been repugnant to the sense of a country gentleman in the reign of Farmer George. But the possible historical value of his expression of Toryism is destroyed by a serious anachronism: the foundation on which his Georgian ideas rest, the sentiment which suffuses them, and the artistic coloring which invests them are mid-Victorian. Mr. Austin upholds the House of Lords, the territorial homes, and the whistling yokel, not like a trueblue Tory-because they were ordained by God: nor like the later philosophical Tory-because they were ordained by nature; but like the unphilosophical, atheistical, pseudo-Catholic Pre-Raphaelite-because they are æsthetically gratifying. That explains his "unconquerable antipathy" to towns, mills, and manufactures, and at the same time his fondness for depicting Britannia leaning smilingly on her undrawn sword. That is why he hates and fears liberalism, and at the same time makes conservatism ridiculous by representing it as invincible. That is why his poems, if read, and his picture of happy England might loosen all the bricks in the pavements of Manchester and Liverpool. For the sentimental romantic Toryism of Mr. Austin is not so much dull as false; false and at the same time obsolete: obsolete but not yet old enough to have acquired an antiquarian inter-STUART P. SHERMAN.

Urbana, Illinois.

NEWS FOR BIBLIOPHILES.

In the Nation of December 23, 1909, I was able to call attention to a number of brief essays belonging to Poe that had hitherto not been accredited to him. I have since come across several other items that have escaped his bibliographers.

These are as follows:

(1.) A review of R. M. Bird's "Calavar," in the Southern Literary Messenger of February, 1835. That this is Poe's is established by his references back to it in his reviews of Bird's "The Infidel" and "The Hawks of Hawk-Hollow," published respectively in the June and December issues of the Messenger for 1835 (see the "Virginia Poe," VIII, 32 f., 63 f.). The item is of special interest as being, so far as we have any tangible evidence, the earliest of Poe's contributions to the Messenger, and the first of a long line of book reviews.

(2.) A notice of Anthon's edition of Smith's "Dictionary of Greek and Roman fuseness-Objectionable Concision," in the Antiquities," in the Southern Literary Mes- Evening Mirror of January 22, 1845. senger for May, 1845. This paraphrases in part of the fourth paragraph is compiled that the value of his representation is part Poe's notice of the same work in the from the ninth paragraph of a "Marginimpaired by his complete identification Broadway Journal of April 12, 1845 ("Vir- alia" item on Gibbon and Carlyle, published some doubt is thrown on the authenticity of this item by Mr. B. B. Minor's statement, in his history of the Southern Literary Messenger, p. 140, that Poe, who, as announced in the Messenger of the month preceding that in which this article appeared, had been engaged by the editor (then Mr. Minor himself) to furnish "monthly a critique raisonnée of the most important forthcoming works," did not fulfil his engagement "in the least part." But the most reasonable assumption to be made is that Mr. Minor's memory played him false in this matter, and that Poe simply made his article do double duty, as he did. we know, on more than one other occasion. Poe had also been engaged to write for the Messenger in the autumn of 1844; and in accordance with this arrangement he did send to the editor "two or three articles"so Mr. Minor wrote Prof. James A. Harrison ("Virginia Poe," I, 220)-though only one of these, "The Literary Life of Thingum Bob," in the Messenger of December, 1844, can now be traced. It is probable, I think, that Mr. Minor confuses the two engagements.

(3.) A brief but lively notice of Grattan's "Highways and By-Ways," in Burton's Gentleman's Magazine for June, 1840. This article subsequently appeared either verbatim or in paraphrase in two separate instalments of the "Marginalia" (see the Virginia Poe," XVI, 63, 140 f.).

(4.) A review of a pamphlet detailing the "Discoveries and Results of the United States Exploring Expedition" into the South Seas led by J. N. Reynolds in the late thirties. This appeared in Graham's Magazine, September, 1843. The item is acknowledged by Poe in a memorandum sent to Graham in 1845 or thereabouts, and is included by the latter in his article on Poe in Graham's for March, 1850.

(5.) A series of five oditorials on the Pay of American Authors," in the New York Evening Mirror, published, respectively, in the issues of October 12, 1844, and January 24, 25, 27, and 31, 1845. The first is entitled, "The Pay for Periodical Writing," the fourth has the sub-title, "The Magazines," and the fifth the sub-title, 'Synopsis of the International Copyright Question." Poe's authorship is established in two ways: first, by Willis's announcement in an editorial on October 10, 1844. that Poe would take up the subject of "Authors' Pay in America," in the columns of the Mirror ("We have hot coals smouldering in the ashes of 'things put off,' which we poke reluctantly to the surface just now-reluctantly only because we wish to light beacons for an authors' crusade, and we have no leisure to be more than its Peter the Hermit. We solemnly summon Edgar Poe to do the devoir of Cœur De Lion-no man's weapon half so trenchant!"); secondly, by the reappearance, in close paraphrase, of the last four paragraphs of the concluding article of the series in a set of the "Marginalia," published in Godey's Lady's Book in September, 1845 ("Virginia Poe," XVI, 78 f.).

(6.) An editorial, entitled "American Dif-in the Democratic Review for November, 1844 ("Virginia Poe," XVI, 16).

(7.) "Why not try a Mineralized Pavement?" an editorial, published in the Evening Mirror, February 8, 1845. The ninth and tenth paragraphs reappeared with slight changes as the seventh and eighth paragraphs of Poe's article on "Street Paving" in the Broadway Journal of April 19, 1845 ("Virginia Poe," XIV. 164 f.). The article is valueless as literature, but possesses significance as showing the variety of Poe's interests.

I wish also in this connection to point out that Poe's tale, "Diddling Considered as One of the Exact Sciences," of which the place of original publication has been advertised by Poe's editors and biographers as unknown, first appeared in the Philadelphia Saturday Courier for October 14. 1843. It there has the title, "Raising the Wind; or, Diddling Considered as One of the Exact Sciences." In the same journal there appeared on June 24, July 1, and July 8, 1843, a reprint of the "Gold Bug" as originally published in the Philadelphia Dollar Newspaper of June 21 and 28, 1843. This text of the "Gold Bug" has heretofore been held to be inaccessible, owing to the fact that no copy of the Dollar Newspaper for 1843 has been found. A file of the Saturday Courier for the years 1838 and 1840 to 1849 is preserved in the library of the Pennsylvania Historical Society, at Phila-KILLIS CAMPBELL. delphia.

The University of Texas.

Correspondence

A LETTER OF HAZLITT'S.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: There are a number of prominent gaps in our information concerning Hazlitt's life, and few periods in his career are more obscure than that in which he practised the painter's art before he made his earliest tentative appearance as an author in 1805. Hazlitt was a scant letter-writer during all his days, and there may therefore be a special interest in reclaiming for this period a letter which is assigned by his descendant and biographer to a date ten years earlier than it was apparently written.

In his "Lamb and Hazlitt: Further Letters and Records hitherto unpublished" (1900), Mr. William Carew Hazlitt prints a letter bearing the heading "Sunday, October 23," and supplies "London" and "1793" in brackets, as if the contents pointed to its having been written by Hazlitt in his sixteenth year, while he was a student at the Hackney Theological College. I quote one of the sentences:

Amidst that repeated disappointment, & that long dejection, which have served to overcast & to throw into deep obscurity some of the best years of my life, years which the idle and illusive dreams of boyish expectation had presented glittering, & gay, & presperous, decked out in all the fairness and all the brightness of colouring, & crowded with fantastic forms of numerous hues [?] of ever-varying pleasure,-amidst much dissatisfaction and much sorrow, the reflection that there are

What a melancholy experience of life for a youth of fifteen! It out-Byrons Byron, and it might expose to suspicion the one quality of Hazlitt's character which his severest critics have not called into question, his downright sincerity. But in spite of the inherent incongruousness, Mr. Birrell in his "Life of Hazlitt" unhesitatingly accepts the date, and remarks:

There are many allusions at this time to repeated disappointments," "long dejection," and other symptoms of boyish melancholy, and it is plain that Hackney College was not congenial.

But would not these expressions assume a more coherent significance if we ascribed them to a young man who had actually issued forth for his first battle with the world and had met a repulse? If we continue to read the letter with this notion in mind, we find confirmation for our view in the following allusion:

As to my essay, it goes on, or rather it moves backwards and forwards; however, it does not stand still. I have been chiefly employed hitherto in rendering my knowemployed hitherto in rendering my knowledge of my subject as clear and intimate as I could, and in the arrangement of my plan, I have done little else. I have proceeded some way in a delineation of the system, which founds the propriety of virtue on its coincidence with the pursuit of private interest, and of the imperfections inseparable from its scheme. . . .
I write more easily than I did. I hope for good. I have ventured to look at high for good. I have ventured to look at high things. I have toiled long and painfully to attain to some stand of eminence. It were hard to be thrown back from the mid-way of the steep to the lowest humilia-

We must marvel at the owl-sightedness which can overlook such glaring evidence. Apparently, Mr. W. C. Hazlitt sees in this passage a reference to the political essay which Hazlitt wrote for his master at Hackney in place of one of the prescribed themes. But "a system which founds the propriety of virtue on its coincidence with the pursuit of private interest" can refer to nothing more plainly than to the "Essay in Defence of the Natural Disinterestedness of the Human Mind," the idea of which he had already conceived when he talked with Coleridge in 1798, and which at last struggled into print, though scarcely into light, in 1805.

With these limiting dates in our possession, and with Sunday, October 23, as a clue, it only remains for us to consult the almanac in order to determine the precise time of writing. In the course of the search we are confirmed in our suspicions of the slovenly editing, for we find that October 23 did not fall on Sunday in 1793, but that it did so fall in the years 1796 and 1803. Hazlitt was at home in 1796, and so could not have addressed the letter to his father, but everything in the letter suits excellently with 1803, and we must therefore accept the last as the year of composition.

Nothing in Hazlitt's expressions will now impress us as either precocious or affected. At the age of twenty-five Hazlitt had much cause for melancholy. Youthful idols had been shattered, for Coleridge had already joined the apostates from the ranks of liberty. England was again at war with one or two persons in the world who are [not] quite indifferent towards me, nor altogether unanxious for my welfare, is that private disappointments. Already the splenhumanity as embodied in Hazlitt's lifelong hero, Napoleon; and then there were which is, perhaps, the most "soothing to my did vision of triumph in the company of wounded spirit."

Titian and Rembrandt was suffering dissi-Titian and Rembrandt was suffering dissipation, and Hazlitt was seeking mental relief in elucidating his cherished metaphysical discovery, and here also encountering little but pain and vexation. Read in the light of facts like these, Hazlitt's letter is both interesting and intelligible.

JACOB ZEITLIN

Urbana, Ill., October 10.

"CURRENT MONEY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: In order to make a card index as xhaustive as was practicable, the Deed Books of Prince Edward County, Virginia, have recently been examined by order of the Board of Supervisors of that county, the period covered being from 1754, when the county was set off, to 1850, the year in which the office index begins. During the progress of this work, notes were taken, among other subsidiary items, regarding the phraseology adopted as to currency considerations. Beginning these notes, with strictness about the year 1821, it was supposed that the colonial terms, "current money of Virginia," "Virginia currency," and the like, would soon disappear from usage, at least holding on no longer than the British reckoning by pounds. etc., which seems to drop away about 1829. As advance was made after the year 1821, it was observed with surprise that the phrases, "lawful money of Virginia," "current money of Virginia," "current money of this commonwealth." etc., were frequently employed, and it appeared very much of a paradox that this terminology should be found recorded quite to the end of the period under reviewtwenty-eight instances in 1844, eleven in 1849, and ten in 1850, all the deeds for 1850 not having been examined. For the year 1850, the usual terminology of this sort is "lawful money of Virginia"; 'current money of Virginia" appearing twice (D. B. 25, 503 and 525), and "currency of Virginia" once (D. B. 25, 536). There are thirty-eight deeds recorded for the year 1754, in twenty-five of which appears "Virginia currency," or some such term.

As the investigation was not particularly directed toward this matter, it cannot be stated with absolute certainty in what year the phrase "current money of the United States" appears for the first time. From the memoranda, the first occurrence is in 1821 (D. B. 17, 398). Some such wording is used fifteen times between 1821 and 1850.

"Current money of the United States" is used five times, in 1821, 1834, 1840, 1843, and 1845-in 1843 the instrument is the work of a "freeman of color" or his at-"United States currency" torney. twice used, in 1822 and in 1825. "Money of the United States" is twice used, in 1825 and in 1836; in 1825 by parties removed to Missouri. "United States money" occurs twice, in 1837 and in 1844. The usage in the remaining instances, for the years 1848 and 1850, is "lawful money of the United States."

ALFRED J. MORRISON.

Hampden Sidney, Va., October 9.

WHY SHAKESPEARE LEFT STRATFORD

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: May I offer a new theory in regard to the vexed question of the cause of Shakespeare's departure from Stratford? Various reasons for his course have been assigned-among them the financial stringency of his father, domestic infelicity on his own part, histrionic aspiration, and a dispute with Sir Thomas Lucy about a matter of deer-poaching. My explanation is based upon a line in "Titus Andronicus" (I, i, 314):

These words are razors to my wounded heart.

The comparison is, beyond question, intended to suggest pain. Now a writer may refer to a rose as an instrument of torture, for a rose has thorns as well as beauty; but if he does so in a casual and matter-of-fact way, we can hardly help inferring that his own experiences with roses have not been pleasant. The same thing holds true with razors. When Shakespeare compares the agony produced by harsh words to anything connected with a razor, we are forced to conclude that he had either a dull implement or a beard as tough as wire. In his youthful manhood (the period in which we may assume that he shaved), he would naturally have been impatient in regard to such matters. Ergo, Shakespeare went to London for the sake of better tonsorial accommodations.

So momentous is this discovery that I hasten to give it to the world, without stopping to collate the passages that bear on the subject. The point most damaging to my case is the fact that there is something of a probability that Shakespeare himself did not write the line in question. But the theory is altogether too plausible to be rejected on any such grounds. Baconian theory is far less solidly based, and look at the popularity it has attained! GARLAND GREEVER.

The University of Arkansas, October 2.

SIMPLIFIED SPELLING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

Sin: Will the gentleman who recently told us of some of his personal preferences and prejudices, under the head of 'Spelling and Life," kindly inform us further just what of "life's choicest bits" will disappear when we have reduced to some logical basis the spelling of the last syllable of proceed and precede? When he has done that, possibly he will be kind enough to let us know what "choice bits" we have lost by living in a day when fysshe has become fish, and musick has degenerated

Contrary to current Tory opinion, those of us who are trying to rationalize the spelling of the English language are at least as anxious as are the Tories about the finer things of life; in fact, we are so much interested in them that we long to save for future generations the precious months (estimated by some at two years) which we older ones wasted in learning an orthography without one respectable excuse for existing in its present state. We be-Heve that the time thus saved could be spent in becoming familiar with many more of "life's choicest bits." We also think that the process of learning a rational and to sharpen the wits of our backward race. whereas just the opposite is now going on. One would think that such aims were worthy of the support of the Nation, instead of its sneers.

In reply to our plea, sleepy and ignorant old Rip Van Winkle first trotted out the 'etymological argument," but even intelligent conservatives have begun to perceive that hundreds of our worst spellings not only ignore etymology, but even give false leads (e. g., aisle from ala, foreign from Then there was pious talk of forancus). loyalty to literary tradition, until some cruel scholars showed that we are in principle no more loyal to Shakespeare's spelling to-day than we are to Chaucer's. Finally, the argument from sentiment is used, and we are asked to listen to silly comparisons of the meaningless folly of our spelling habits with such significant ceremonies as marriage. I know not what can be going on in the mind and conscience of the writer who allows an ambiguous use of. the word "symbol" to leave the impression that marriage has no better rational basis than the c in scent (from the Latin sentire). And, if the sentimental attachment to shelves of unused books could be proved to waste about a year of the school-boy's time and to train him in ways of unreason, as well, there might be some reformers cruel enough to protest against that exquisite pleasure. Meantime, so long as association with the backs of a non-circulating library is at least harmless, it does not argue for a very firm grasp of the situation, nor for a very fair attitude of mind, to try to make the cases parallel.

If there were even half the force in the arguments of the simplifiers that they seem to think there is, the situation would not justify misleading witticisms. But, as the matter is one that may mean great things to the intellectual life of a whole race, it at least deserves respectful consideration from the smartest of us. Information upon the subject is near at hand. If one objects to the tracts of the Simplified Spelling Board, one has but to read Professor Lounsbury's charming book on "English Spelling and Spelling Reform" to see what a real scholar who honestly faces facts and argues in the open has to say on the question. Chapter II, on the unintelligent opposition of the intelligent, is to be particularly recommended.

PHILIP H. CHURCHMAN. Clark College, Worcester, Mass., October 5.

[We still believe that the knowledge, even if true, that English spelling is largely arbitrary and perverse, should be a secret for popes and cardinals. who have little need of English anyhow. As soon as it is broadcast the youth of the country at once take the contemplated reform into their own hands and spell phonetically; and as their speech is slovenly, there results not only such a word as goverment which we cited, but something close to the spelling on a bill-of-fare which we have seen-constarge, cullash, fennan haddee. Our real point was that so long as there is a battle among adult logical orthography would in itself help suit themselves. The history of English bridge University, having been a member of spelling in the past is a witness to this. -ED. THE NATION.1

SPELLING REFORM AND PRONUNCIA-TION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: There is one aspect of the question which was not touched in your article on 'Spelling and Life" in your issue of the 28th instant, and that is the influence of 'reformed spelling" on pronunciation. Programme, for instance, when disguised as program, salutes the ear as progrum, and thought emerges as thott. To be sure, only a small amount of written and spoken English is thus maltreated, but I have noted this tendency whenever, in the course of my duty, I have been compelled to listen to speakers afflicted with the spelling-reform fad. On the other hand, one hears from the same people cult-your and literatyour, but never furnit-your or pict-your. Bought and caught seem to have escaped the fate of thott. Thorough and though, passed through the steam roller of the Committee on Simplified (or Stultified?) Spelling, issue as the and there. Phonetically considered, thoro is a gem of purest ray serene.

Chicago, October 8.

IN THE SHADOW OF ISLAM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: The title of a recently published novel is almost exactly that of Isabelle Eberhardt's "Dans l'Ombre chaude de l'Islam," the volume of fragments gathered by a friend after the tragic death of the young author, which to those who know and love the Sahara has a unique value. Was It atavism that led this daughter of Russian parents (one of whom was a Christian, the other a Mussulman), who was born and brought up at Geneva under French influences and in a French milicu, to feel so profoundly the splendor and cruelty, the sad and mysterious fascinations of the great solitudes, and to reflect so truly the character of the Arabs of the South, nomads and ksouriens? At any rate, nothing so penetrating and so poignant as the few pages which record her impressions of a summer's sojourn at the Moroccan Zaonia of Kenadsen has ever been written about the country, and about the life of people for whom the world has stood still for centuries and who are in entire ignorance of the ways and manners of our civilization.

Does it not seem a desecration to have the title of this little record, all that remains of an ardent, restless young life, used as that of a novel?

AUGUST F. JACCACI."

New York, October 11.

DR. MACLAURIN AS JURIST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: The Nation is usually so sure of its premises that, in "Every Man His Own Jurist" of the current issue, the column devoted to Dr. Maclaurin makes delightful reading in view of the fact that Dr. Maclaurin is not only a scientist but a lawyer.

Having won the McMahon law studentship and by his thesis (published later in spellers, younger minds will spell to three languages) the York prize at Camstudied German law in Germany; been dean of the College of Law of the University of New Zealand; and having earned from Cambridge the degree of doctor of laws as well as doctor of science. Dr. Maclaurin is surely more entitled than most men not only to be his own jurist if he chooses, but to be listened to seriously by other men when he speaks on legal subjects.

A. M. BAER.

Baltimore, October 13.

[We were aware of Dr. Maclaurin's early legal studies, but our point was that prominence was given his article as coming from him not as a lawyer but as a scientist .- ED. THE NATION.]

Literature

THE HITTITES.

stang. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. 390 pages. $4 net.

Until the recovery of Egyptian and Babylonian-Assyrian sources of history through excavations and decipherment, there was no Hittite problem, and it is one of the many merits of Professor Sayce to have called attention some thirty years ago, in conjunction with the late Dr. William Wright, to the evidence of an extensive empire in Asia Minor which at one time proved a serious rival to both Egypt and Babylonia. and subsequently came into frequent conflict with Assyria. Since that time a large amount of additional material has been brought to light through the combined efforts of many explorers, and it is one of the chief purposes of the work before us to summarize our present knowledge of the Hittite empire.

The territory embraced by the traces that have been discovered of Hittite settlements now stretches from Northern across Asia Minor, following the line of the Taurus and Anti-Taurus range. Curiously enough, no indications have been found to show that the Hittites settled along the coast of the Black Sea or of the Mediterranean, and it seems safe to say that they represent essentially an inland and largely a mountainous population. This, however, did not prevent them from passing southward into the plains of Babylonia, and in fact our first glimpse of Hittite history shows a Hittite group actually in possession of the Euphrates Valley. This conquest the throne in the city of Babylon. There soon be begun. is now nothing improbable in the supposition that the sons of Heth in south-style of the building remains, in the art hundred years. and the religion; but before turning to This, then, is the Empire of the Hitboundary of the Hittite dominion, which succeeded in holding the Egyptians un-Syria close up to the Black Sea and inary study of this material has been decline of the Empire may be said to made, which is partly in Babylonia, set in after this battle, which took place partly in Hittite, though written with in 1288 B. C. the cuneiform script; but enough has see in the "Hyksos" who overran Egypt tually the whole territory to the south, when a renewal of Assyria's power be-the Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn; a mixed multitude in which the Hittites including northern Syria. The objective form one of the elements, though it point of his conquests was the kingdom would also appear that the Semites con- of Mitanni, whose ruler at that time stituted the predominating contingent, was a certain Tushratta, known to us Significant in this respect is the state- from his correspondence with Egypt inment in Ezekiel (xvi, 3) that the father cluded in the fell Amarna archive. It of Jerusalem was an Amorite, and is not improbable that the people of the mother a Hittite, in which Mitanni belonged to the Hittite group, combination the Amorites represent as should appear certainly to be the in the mind of the prophet the case with the States of Arzawa and Khalpre-Hebraic Semitic element, and the irabbat (or Khani-rabbat), which lay on Hittite the non-Semitic element. It the way to northern Syria. Subbi-luliuis, therefore, not surprising to find ma succeeded in this endeavor, and his Hittites occupying prominent positions growing strength prompted the Amorat the court of Solomon and David. The ites who had hitherto been the allies of centre of the Hittite power, however, Egypt to cast their fortunes with the even in this early period, appears to Hittites. The next step would have been have been in northern Syria, and from an attack on Egypt which had up to here it should seem to have spread both this time retained a measure of suto the south and to the north, northeast premacy over Palestine and Syria. Instead, however, we find Subbi-luliuma But the ethnic problem is still far from making a treaty with Amenophis III, satisfactory. It is complicated by the which was renewed by Amenophis IV. The Land of the Hittites. By John Gar- proof furnished through representations when, in 1375 n.c., he came to the throne. on Egyptian monuments of two distinct A limit was thus put to any further ex-Hittite types, one Mongolian with a tension of the Hittite power in one diclearly recognized pig-tail, high cheek rection, while, to the East, Assyria formbones, and oblique eyes; the other desig- ed an irresistible barrier, though it now nated by Professor Garstang as proto- turns out that the Assyrian Kingdom it-Grecian, though one may question the self was established, c. 2000 B. C. by a justification of this term. At all events, branch of the Hittites who subsequently, the two types point to an admixture of however, lost control. Subbi-luliuma various ethnic elements to form the Hit- could well rest content with what he had tite group. Indeed, it is more proper to accomplished, and the extensive empire speak of Hittite groups, united only in that he had created by his exploits, so far as they were submitted to the stretching from the Halys Basin to the same cultural and political influences. Euphrates, remained in the hands of his These influences are to be seen in the successors for a period of nearly two > these it may be proper to dwell a little tites in the period of its greatest longer on the historical material. This strength as revealed to us in its general has been largely increased through the outlines. During the next century they successful work of Dr. Hugo Winckler were kept busy resisting the inroads of at Boghaz-Keui, near the northern Assyria and Egypt, and, although they in the fourteenth century B. C. became der Rameses II at bay in a severe enthe capital city. As yet only a prelim- counter at Kadesh on the Orontes, the

After c. 1200 s. c. we hear little more been published to show that an official of the Hittite power in the annals of archive has been discovered embodying Egyptian rulers. They are replaced by treaties with various nations, including the Muski, who, for a time, become the Egypt, the Amorites, and Mitanni in dominant force in Asia Minor and who, northwestern Mesopotamia, as well as as Professor Garstang believes, may official correspondence with Egypt, Babylonia, and Mitanni. At least six Phrygian conquerors of later times. generations of Hittite rulers are covered The Hittite states were split up into a by these archives. During the past summer Dr. Winckler has again been at following centuries it is a Hittite state work at Boghaz-Keul, and it is to be with its centre at Carchemish with took place c. 1700 B, C., and for about hoped that the systematic publication of which Assyrian rulers like Tiglathpilestwenty years a Hittite ruler occupied these important collections of texts will er I (1125-1100 n. c.) come into conflict. A decline of the Assyrian Empire which The chief movement of this period appears in after Tiglathplieser I enables the pears to be the advance of the Hittite Hittites to regain some of their lost ern Palestine, with whom Abraham had ruler Subbi-luliuma, who, in a succession prestige. During the tenth century, they commercial relations, should represent of hold campaigns enlarged his dominion succeeded in shaking off the yoke ima branch of this same Hittite group; which was originally limited to the dis- posed upon them by the Assyrians, and and Professor Garstang is inclined to trict around Boghaz-Keui to embrace vir- until the middle of the ninth century, gins, the Hittite states, at all events valuable information regarding the re- two miles to the east of Boghaz-Keui were free agents. An internal disruption may also be assumed as one of the factors which led to the gradual loss of one stronghold after the other. Carchemish. Kummukih, Milid, Samalla (or Sindjerli), Gurgum, were obliged to acknowledge the suzerainty of Assyria. In the latter half of the sixth century, the Persian power under the lead of Cyrus and his generals appears on the scene, but the ineffective Persian rule leaves few traces in the region in which Greek influence and Greek ideas were steadily advancing. With the conquest of Asia Minor by Alexander the Great a new era, marked by the more or less complete Hellenization of the interior section, sets in. There thus result three periods of Hittite history: the first in the second millennium before our era, marked by the control of the Euphrates Valley for a short time and by settlements as far south as Hebron in Palestine; the second in the fourteenth century, leading to the establishment of an extensive Hittite Empire in Asia Minor and embracing northern Syria through the union of the various Hittite states with its centre at Boghaz-Keui; the third in the tenth century, which may be designated as a Renaissance, brought about again by a union of Hittite states, this time with the political centre at Carchemish.

The recovery of this significant chapter in the history of mankind is all the more noteworthy if it be borne in mind that the Hittite inscribed monuments, of which we now have a large number, have not yet been deciphered. Various attempts have been made during the past two decades, notably by Professor Jensen of Marburg and by Professor Sayce; but Jensen's learned method has been rejected, and Sayce's ingenious method has not been accepted. Progress has been made in determining the general character of the inscriptions, some of which are clearly of a votive character, while others are quite certainly historical, and a few ideographic signs, such as those for king and country, may also be regarded as satisfactorily settled; but all this represents only a small beginning, and the key to a solution of the mysterious problem is yet to be discovered. There are, however, good reasons for believing that a definite basis will be obtained through the publication of the Boghaz-Keui archives, containing in all probability Hittite documents transcribed into cuneiform characters

Not only have the general outlines of Hittite history been recovered through the laborious researches of a number of European scholars, but the careful study of the monuments from a geographical probability the symbol of the sun-god, and archeological point of view, in con- as it appears also in Babylonian art.

might have been a rather dry narrative ber of good illustrations, he furnishes a valuable summary of the sites, monuments of an unmistakable Hittite character have been found. The Hittite sites so far identified include walled palaces have been unearthed. In addition we have found Hittite fortresses, rock carvings with or without inscriptions in about a dozen places, and, lastly, movable stones, embracing sculptures in the round, mural reliefs, reliefs representing ceremonial feasts, offerings, hunting scenes, inscriptions accompanying human figures, and inscriptions only at more than thirty sites. Of stones that were certainly found in situ we have, to be sure, only two-one at Kuru-Bel, close to the modern Comana, and one at Bogche, not far from Cæserea; but supplementary evidence shows that with the exception of a small number of monuments, evidently carried far away from their original position, the rest belong to the district in which they were discovered. Dividing the monuments into five groups according to the place of discovery, (a) monuments of northern Syria, (b) monuments in the Taurus and Anti-Taurus range, (c) monuments of the Halys Basin, (d) monuments of the West, and (e) monuments of the southeast, Professor Garstang proceeds to a detailed description of these remains, accompanied by numerous illustrations. A site particularly rich in its yield of Hittite monuments is Marash, among which are two stone lions, covered with inscriptions, that originally stood at the entrance to a palace or other large building. Both the art displayed in the sculpture and the subject are characteristic of Hittite works, for the lion and the eagle (or the double-headed eagle) are the two most prominent emblems in Hittite religious art, and at Boghaz-Keui they are found in association. Of the lion we can now say definitely that it is the animal associated with the great mother goddess and her son who in various forms and under various designations in the ancient Orient correspond to the Semitic Ishtar nection with supplementary evidence The most elaborate sculptures discov- of the pantheon is also the storm whose

the one with Carchemish as its capital, ligion, art, architecture, habitations, and and known as Jasily Kaya-the "Incustoms of the various Hittite groups, scribed Rock." Winding around the Professor Garstang has performed this smoothed surface of the rocks at this part of his task in summing up the data place, there are two large processions of procured in this way in a most satisfac- figures approaching one another. On tory manner. In addition to a chapter the left-hand side there are no less on the geography of the region covered than 43 figures sculptured on the rocks, by Hittite settlements, in which what on the other side 22 in number. The head of each procession is clearly a is relieved by interesting glimpses of deity-on the left side a god, on the present conditions and by a large num- right a goddess followed by a god who, there is every reason to believe, is the son of the goddess. It is clear from this more than fifty in number, in which that the entire scene is of a religious character.

> In each procession Professor Garstang has also succeeded in identifying towns to the number of about seven, in a large figure as the king acting also in most of which remains also of Hittite a priestly capacity, and on the whole one inclines to the view that it is the same royal personage who is here twice represented. But exactly what kind of religious scene is portraved in this remarkable group must for the present remain doubtful, though there is much to be said in favor of our author's suggestion that the scene represents the symbolical nuptials of the male and female principle in Nature indicated by the chief male and chief female deity.

This leads us to say a word about the religion of the Hittites, on which Professor Garstang touches only incidentally. Indeed, it is one of the defects in this work, so complete in almost all other respects, that the author has not put together in systematic form the data from the Hittite monuments and from the Egyptian and Babylonian sources regarding the Hittite gods and the nature of their worship. Much is to be gathered also from seal cylinders of Hittite origin, as may be seen from the chapter on the subject in Dr. Ward's "Seal Cylinders of Western Asia." To mention only one point, Dr. Ward has made it probable that the type of the naked goddess in Babylonian art is an importation due to Hittite influence. Whether in return we justified in tracing the cult of the mother-goddess in Hittite regions to Babylonia is open to question. The idea seems to have been common to the Semites, and it may well be that it spread into Asia Minor without the direct intervention of Babylonian culture. The lion in Babylonia and Assyria is the symbol of Marduk, who is a solar deity, and not, as among the Hittites, of the mother-goddess whose emblem, in Assyria at all events, appears rather to have been the dove. As for the chief deity, while it is true, as Professor Garstang also points out, that he has the qualities of a solar deity, there is another phase of nature associated with and Tammuz, while the eagle is in all him that is equally important. As is natural in the case of a mountainous people, the god who stands at the head from other sources, has revealed much ered up to the present time are those voice is heard in the thunder, who drives along in the wind, and who hurls perfect Hittite text as yet discovered, mance, nothing more nor less. Her also represented with an axe. The bull text evidently commemorates. -the symbol of strength-becomes the animal with which he is associated. In the three important plans of Hittite Babylonia, in the same way, the sun and structures and the three useful maps the storm, with the accompanying thun- in the book, of the alphabetically arder, lightning, and rain, are combined ranged list of Hittite sites, with deinto a single conception, and the chief tailed indications of the monuments deity, in the various periods, now Enlil, found at each, as well as of the Biblioglater Marduk, in one place Ningirsu, in another Ninib, manifests both the traits complete, comprises all of importance of the sun-god and of the warring stormgod.

The two chief religious ideas present in Semitic religion-the male and female principle-are also to be recognized, as there is no indication that among the Hittites the ascendency was given to the female principle. A development in this themselves have passed away and the must have been virtually the last thing through Hittite influences. We question, with the short story. It is made out of however, whether Professor Garstang is whole cloth, cleverly enough, but with right in tracing the tradition of the effort. As a mere invention, it is hard-Amazons back to Hittite days. That the ly notable. The plot is not new-even Amazons are originally the priestesses its touches of melodrama are of convenof the mother-goddess is quite likely, tional sort. The American girl who but the conception of the Amazon itself marries the Irish lord, and finds herseems to be due to other influences-Aryan or proto-Aryan. But we will not lady with a long pedigree. Here, to be quarrel with our author on this and sure, instead of the angry dowager, her other points in his work which might "little young ladyship" has to contend be controverted and in regard to which with a jealous twin-brother who feels more material is needed before a definite decision can be reached. Professor his birthright. Unluckily, this gentle-Garstang will probably be the first to man is painted so black as to be hardly recognize the defects of his work, but his grasp of the wide subject is so thor- feriors, faithless to equals, envious of ough and he has made such a careful his betters, he is a very pretty figure of study of the material now at our dis- malice-for a lay figure. His only good posal that we can well afford to over- trait is love for the home of his anlook any shortcomings which do not affect major matters.

vantage of two journeys of exploration villain turns his mind deliberately toin Asia Minor, so that his study has been supplemented by what he has mother and child, and even of his seen and observed; and many of the brother. His lordship, after the fashion photographs in the volume are the fruit of heroes in fiction, refuses to see what of these journeys. How great the interest in the fascinating subject is may be gathered from the expedition organized luck. But murder is out at last: all the this very year, under the auspices of younger brother's perfidy is made clear, the British Museum, to carry on excabegun last March by Prof. D. G. Ho- in the neighborhood of Glendaire Castle garth, the eminent archæologist, whose -a sporting baronet, M.F.H., utterly historical romance, dealing with the him admirably for the task. From the written with feeling of the condition of first report published a few weeks ago, the peasantry in Ireland, and we sus- English court. Queen Mary of England it appears that already a large number pect from the opening of the story that plays a prominent part in the story and of important finds have been made, in- some solution is to be offered. The sus-

Mention ought to be specially made of raphy, which, while not aiming to be and of permanent value that has been published on the subject.

CURRENT FICTION.

we have seen, in the Hittite religion, but Her Little Young Ladyship. By Myra Kelly. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

One's first notion of the book would direction does, in fact, take place in be that it is an early and more preten-Asia Minor, but not until a compara- tious effort on the part of the popular tively late date. The cult of the mother- chronicler of East Side childhood. But goddess survives after the Hittites the date of the dedication shows that it Kybele or mater magna of the Phryg- written by Miss Kelly. It has the deians is a survival of the old Semitic fects noticeable in so many novels writonly slightly transformed ten by those who have been successful self in hot water with his family, is a that mere chance has ousted him from visible to the imagination. Cruel to incestors, and this becomes the foundation of his villany. After the birth of Professor Garstang has had the ad- a son to her little young ladyship, the ward schemes for getting rid of the everybody else sees, and continues to regard his brother as a fine fellow in hard and it only remains for him to depart cluding the largest and about the most picion proves idle: the story is a ro- introduced. Part of the action occurs the lightning. Such a god is preëmi- in connection with a series of thirteen ladyship's American father and mother, nently a warrior-deity, and as such is slabs depicting a battle scene which the self-made and independent, are well drawn. Abraham Petty, an American rustic of whom a good deal is made, is simply a "comic" in the Sunday-supplement understanding of the word. There is amusing dialogue, and there are one or two well-managed situations in the book, but we should hardly judge from it that Miss Kelly would have developed power as a novelist if she had lived. She will be remembered for the humor and fidelity with which she painted a picturesque and passing phase of life in the American metropolis

> White Motley. By Max Pemberton. New York: Sturgis & Walton Co.

A titled scalliwag, a lovely, long-suffering wife, and a very perfect gentleman of humble antecedents-upon this well-established triangle is erected a thoroughly up-to-date romance. The inevitable elbow-rubbing incident to travel is, for the nonce, curiously prominent in the mind of the insular novelists. The phenomenal opportunities which the public hostelry affords for contact between different strata of English society, have been made the basis of at least four novels within the last six months, and this is at least the second in which we have been treated to the edifying spectacle of the Briton shedding his shell under the recreative influences of Alpine sport. Thus it will be seen that in bringing together a heroine from the upper class and a hero from the middle class, amid the rout of merrymakers at a Swiss resort, Mr. Pemberton is in line with the best current English practice; while in the aeronautical feats which he imputes to his hero he is well ahead of the game. Ghostly trial flights by moonlight, followed by a spectacular prizewinning voyage over the great peaks of the Pennine Alps, easily put "Benny" into a class by himself. It only remains for him to establish a record for the aviator in fiction by flitting over the inferior Alps into Italy on a little private errand of chivalry, in order to demonstrate that the magic carpet and the seven-league boots are already things of the past.

House of Torment. By C. Ranger-Gull. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.

As "Guy Thorne" Mr. Ranger-Gull is known as the author of "When It Was vations at one of the most important of from the scene by way of an epileptic Dark" and other pseudo-religious novels Hittite centres-Carchemish. Work was fit. There is another unmitigated brute of a distinctly High-Church tendency. "House of Torment" is in intention an wide knowledge and experience fitted heartless and inhuman. Miss Kelly has adventures of John Commendone, gentleman to King Philip of Spain at the several other historical personages are paragraphs. The story is not without tions, brisk dialogues, and dramatic crises. But persistent harping upon bigotry, cruelty, and licentiousness grows monotonous: tragedy heavily and evenly spread becomes wearisome. His best writing concerns a subject likely to offend his usual constituency. He describes minutely and vividly a house of Ill-fame frequented by Philip of Spain. The proprietress, the inmates, the untrappings of vice-these are set forth with a skill that cannot be denied. That this passage, however well written, is in place in a book of this character is doubtful. The lascivious side of the King's character could be less offensiveto rid himself of his fondness for stating that sounds shiver. "The lutes shivering out their arpeggio accompaniment," "A high tenor voice shivered out in song." "A little shivering noise rang out into the room," "A sweet tenor voice shivered out beneath the bellying sails" -surely, Roget's Thesaurus would fur-Thesaurus he might turn to the novels profit. write historical romances.

The Heart of a Woman, By Baroness Orczy. New York: George H. Doran

The author of this book set out with a clever idea for a murder story, and so far as it keeps to murder and mystery it is neither unsuccessful nor uninteresting. But the language of the writer In summoning her characters into action, the language of the lovers, the behavior of the accused and the guilty. are on a plane quite apart from the main issue, so that the reader who should be thrilling is compelled to smile. The author continually insists upon the fact that her two young Londoners, the plighted pair, members of the great world of society, are commonplace and Grand Canary in 1906, at the all too conventional. It is not to dispute the early age of fifty-six, cut short the acpoint that the reviewer notes it, but to tivity of one of England's most remarkask why, being indisputable, it need be able scholars. He at first planned to maintained early and late and almost practise at the bar, and had time to write rancorously? It must be said that for very little until well past thirty. But in commonplace folk they indulge in an 1885, his love of study led him to a lecunusual plethora of language bordering tureship at Cambridge. In the score of at moments upon the grand manner. He, years which remained to him he won on the point of becoming "a fugitive for himself, by his rich output of raw acteristic of Maitland's mind and work from justice," makes a long speech to material from the Year Books and by which unfortunately has not been sharher, expressing his envy of the slaves of his finely finished work in a number of ed by a sufficient number of English, or olden days, that he might kneel before volumes, a foremost place among the even American, legal historians-his achis lady-love and have her place her great contributors to the history of Eng- quaintance with foreign, especially Gernaked foot upon his neck. "The light lish law. In fact, we fancy that those man, scholarship and jurisprudence. It of this lamp throws a golden radiance who are fit to judge will regard him as used to be a habit of his to look over in Spain, and the author describes the over you, your lips are quivering-oh! the most important legal writer since tortures of the Inquisition in great de- ever so slightly, and your eyes reveal Blackstone. tail. Yet all his labored effort fails to to me the exquisiteness of your soul." served man of the world." Then she porations. and minstrelsy.

> Phyllis in Middlewych. By Margaret Westrup. New York: John Lane Co.

Phyllis shone like a juvenile goddess of Middlewych. Silly old maids were tremulously eager for her society, and easily mistook her lightly veiled contempt for flattering partiality. Little lads who suffered from over-doses of coddling grew quite manly after associating with her for a few days. On Phyllis's advice children were adopted, nish Mr. Ranger-Gull with some usable by Phyllis's example rude manners were synonyms. And after studying the rebuked, Phyllis herself, besides being extremely well-bred in an English way, of Sir Walter Scott with pleasure and was altogether a jaunty little sportswo-For Sir Walter knew how to man. With her parents, who were really quite a credit to her, she maintained the most cordial relations. Their informality was such jolly good form, you see, "Old girl," says her father to Phyllis. "Old man," responds she to him, in the most enviable, off-hand style imaginable. We had hoped in our crude American hearts that the race of "wise children" to which Phyllis belongs was by this time totally

ESSAYS OF PROFESSOR MAITLAND

The Collected Papers of Frederic William Maitland, Edited by H. A. L. Fisher. 3 vols. Cambridge University New York: G. P. Putnam's Press. Sons. $10 net.

The death of Professor Maitland at

Some years ago Mr. Balfour, then produce that thrill of horror which an For her "there was a quaint joy in hear- Prime Minister, spoke in the House of artist in fiction could cause in a few ing him thus rambling on-he, the re- Commons of the trade unions as cor-A distinguished lawyer on interest, and there are colorful descrip- gives him "in that even, contralto voice the opposition benches interrupted him of hers which he loved to hear," a discourse on feelings generally, her own tions." "I know that," retorted Mr. Balspecifically, telling him in conclusion: four; "I am talking English, not law." "You have no right, having once come Maitland knew how to talk both. It was into my life, having once given sub- part of his rare gift to treat legal substance and vitality to my love, to with- jects with equal learning, lucidity, and draw yourself away from me." And this charm. As in the case of William James, with the police nearing the door! It is his pages often have the fascinating rather a pity that the central theme had playfulness of a kitten with a ball of not been treated by another hand than yarn. He will pounce upon an idea, toss sexed attendant, the exotic and decadent that which strewed the flowers of love it in the most amusing directions, and unroll unsuspected lengths of subtle speculation. "He was always learned, always original, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred he was transparently right." In addition to his delightful style-not too common among writers on ly indicated. The author would do well among the dull earth-born inhabitants law-Maitland was distinguished from many lawyers and legal historians by a scientific habit of thought and an abounding common sense which freed him from pedantry and conventional conservatism. He reverenced ancient law. He delighted to trace the origin of legal rules in the social and economic conditions of a bygone age. But with all his knowledge of and reverence for the dead past, he had a keen appreciation of the living present. He hated to see an old rule unfitly surviving in a changed environment. One of the most vigorous chapters in the "Collected Papers" is his plea for the modernization of the trightfully complex and anachronistic English law of real property (I, 162 ff.). In contrast, he praises the Germans. In their new Civil Code there is incorporated, indeed, a great deal of old law which reaches back to ancient Rome or to mediæval Germany. "But all this stuff," Maitland says (III, 485).

> wheresoever obtained, has recently been passed through modern minds, has been debated, criticised, refined; and an endeavor has been made to present it as a single, coherent, homogeneous whole. Could anything of the same sort be said of us? Are we facing modern times with modern ideas, modern machinery, modern weapons? 1 wish that I could think so. Some of our ideas seem to be antiquated; some of our machinery seems to me cumbrous and rusty; some of our weapons I would liken to blunderbusses, apt to go off at the wrong . I would mention in particular end. . . a great deal of what we call the Law of Real Property. It seems to me to be full of rules that no one would enact nowadays unless he were in a lunatic asylum,

This passage suggests another charillumined by a study of foreign systems. No Englishman was more keenly sensitive than Maitiand to the fact that Brunner and other Germans had been invading the field or English history in a superior fashion. Yet no man was more generous and hearty than he in his appreciation of their services. And if England had had more scholars of Maitland's mould, she would scarcely have had to wait so long, and in the end be beholden to a German-Dr. Liebermann-for an adequate edition of her own precious Anglo-Saxon laws.

The three volumes here presented do not, of course, include any of Maitland's integral and earlier published works-"English Law before Edward I." "Canon "Township and Borough." "Domesday Book," "Political Theories in the Middle Ages," "English Law and the Renaissance," the "Life of Leslie Stephen," or the posthumous "Constitutional History." Nor do they include those admirable prefaces which he wrote for the documents which he edited for the Selden Society and for the Rolls Series; these are easily accessible to students and could not without injury be wrenched from the texts which they were intended to introduce. Otherwise these three volumes contain, so Mr. Fisher assures us, substantially the whole of Maitland's scattered writings. With two exceptions the papers have been printed before, but we are grateful to Mr. Fisher for gathering them together from their inaccessible or unknown lodgment in various periodicals and encyclopædias. Arranged mostly in the order in which they were written. they enable us to trace the growth of Maitland's interest and activity along special lines. They begin with a philosophical dissertation on "Liberty and Equality" submitted by the author as a young Cambridge graduate in competition for a Trinity fellowship. They end is it interrupted by an outburst of spon- ing political schemes sometimes went with beautiful appreciations of the character and work of his good friends. Bishop Stubbs, Lord Acton, Leslie Stephen, Henry Sidgwick, and Mary Bateson. The other chapters cover a variety of subjects, of which not even a the army, he plunges straightway into superior judgment. The book fitly closes list can here be given. The profession- an enumeration of the sights of the city, with a letter dated December 23, 1887, al lawyer will enjoy the chapters on not forgetting the elephant in the Jar- in which he consults Bismarck with rethe peculiar origin and character of din des Plantes and the Palais Royal. gard to the advisability of initiating his English Trusts and corporations. The His impressions are emphasized with a grandson into the affairs of state, since layman and historian will be most in- profusion of exclamation points and cul- the illness of the crown prince gave terested in Maitland's criticism of Her- minate in a postscript which reads: cause for alarm. bert Spencer's theory of society, his plea for a reform of the land laws, his "Rea- grossen Oper!!! Göttlich!!!!" Close their language. The sovereign who sons why the history of English law is upon this bit of boyish enthusiasm fol- spoke so frequently and emphatically of not written," his brilliant sketch, which low some pages of maxims dated 1815, the force of moral example, did not followed five years later, of the "Out- which show quite a different phase of write an exemplary German, but interlines of English Legal History," his ob- his character. They are replete with larded his language with an amazing jections to Sir Henry Maine's generaliza- moral precepts and resolutions of a amount of foreign expressions and quotions in regard to early village commu-commonplace Sunday-school variety, and tations. True to his conservatism he erature which fell from the German German Civil Code, and his reviews of sophisticated generation. presses. He believed (and his writings various books. Many of the papers, howtrained student of English history.

index. We should have been glad if he of his brother-in-law which he publishcontains a few of Maitland's letters.

zig: Insel-Verlag.

ments as sovereign.

then no prospect of succeeding to the of impeachment and dismissal. throne and was destined for the army. "Nein, die himmlischen Balletts der the weekly lists of the tons of legal lit- nities, his account of the making of the sound very strange to the ears of a more

With advancing years the pious note bear the fruits of his belief) that the ever, are very technical and deal with obtrudes itself more and more in both student of English law can be greatly problems the simplest terms of which his personal and his official utterances. are not to be apprehended except by the Perhaps no other monarch of modern times was so sincerely convinced of the Mr. Fisher has added an excellent "Gottesgnadentum" of royalty as was William I. It was probably the secret had reprinted by way of introduction of his popularity with a great part of the discriminating biographical memoir the people, who admired him for his simple faith, and saw in him a man ened a year and a half ago, and which deavoring to the best of his knowledge and ability to fulfil the duties of his responsible position. No less firmly was he convinced of Prussia's right to su-Briefe Kaiser Wilhelms des Ersten. premacy over the other German states Nebst Denkschriften und anderen Auf- when the question of uniting them unzeichnungen in Auswahl herausge- der one government began to be disgeben von Erich Brandenburg. Leip- cussed. He was, indeed, during the tumultuous fourth and fifth decades of the The editor of this volume tactfully past century, the very backbone of conrefrains from unconditional eulogy, ad- servatism. He writes on the 11th of Demitting that the success of William I. cember, 1849, that the Constitution was less due to his own merits than to should not acknowledge civil marriage, his choice of the ablest men of his time and that it should limit the people's right to pilot the ship of state through per- to meet in public and organize societies; ilous situations. To hold in check and and he recommends a parliamentary induce to work harmoniously two such body similar to the English House of strong individualities as Bismarck and Lords to support the conservative ele-Moltke was indeed proof of superior ments against the encroachments of dejudgment, and to yield to their better mocracy. He refers to his reputation counsel with no loss of dignity to him- as "Revolutionsriecher." His was an ideal self was one of his greatest achieve- of military rule, and in that curious document drafted April 10, 1857, and The main interest of the book lies not, called his last will, he thanks his brothas one would expect, in its glimpses into er, the King, for having allowed him to political machinery, but in its human restore "Zucht und Ordnung" in Gerquality. It shows the founder of the many. There is a letter from the same new German empire divested of im- year in which he sharply distinguishes perial purple and gives an opportunity between parliamentary legislation and to trace his personal development. The parliamentary government, accepting first entry in the book is a childish bit the former but decidedly rejecting the of writing from the prince's eleventh latter. Though he would not have a year, a page from a diary, reflecting Cabinet appear infallible, he desires to the zest with which the prince, who had see it protected against the possibility

Of the letters of a later period those entered upon the methodical routine of addressed to Bismarck throw light upon his future career. The serious tenor of the peculiar relation between the sovethese reflections and of some of the earli- reign and his prime minister. It is er letters is rather amusing. Only once quite evident that Bismarck's far-reachtaneous youthful enthusiasm, when on beyond the comprehension of William I. April 4, 1814, he writes from Paris, There is a guarded self-consciousness in which he had entered with the victor- his replies, showing that he was overious army. Referring his correspondent awed by admiration for Bismarck's to Count Schwerin for news regarding genius, and had implicit faith in his persisted in the use of linguistic hybrids chafe under the necessity, it is impossi- from Cotgrave's French-English Dic-"inquietirt," "maliziös," "Rhein-Grenzen-"perhorreszirt," "konote to Generalmayor von Boyen he thanks him for the "deliziösen serredas man sich denken kann inklusive original purity.

A peculiar feature of these letters is

The Cambridge History of English Litand Puritan. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50 net.

The last two volumes of this work brought down the account of the drama to the closing of the theatres in 1642. In the present volume the history of non-dramatic literature is resumed, and we have a survey of the Cavalier and Puritan writers whose activity, although in some instances extending beyond the Restoration, is identified at least in spirit with the reign of Charles I and the period of the Commonwealth. The age embraces, of course, some of the principal names in English literature, and we have here consequently a corresponding gain in interest as compared with some of the preceding volumes. The reader who recalls Professor Saintsbury's article on Shakespeare in this history will observe with some misgivhowever much the individual critic may cabulary very largely, if not mainly, Poets, although it is barely referred to which his mother-tongue owed to the ble to offer any adequate contribution tionary. Happiest of all in this chapter Gallomania of Frederick the Great, at to a work of this character without giv- is the characterization of Walton's a time when the reaction against them ing due consideration to the labors of "Compleat Angler," whose landscape was already strong. In a letter to Bis- other men. As far as the chapter on marck of April 16, 1864, occur the terms Milton is concerned, those portions are most satisfactory which make the least demand on the writer's critical powers. alisiren," "realisiren," etc. In a personal Thus the life and prose writings are well described, and Professor Saintsbury's unconventional habit of mind papiers, der das Geschmackvollste ist, stands him here in good stead, when without mincing words he sets down to des attentiösen Blaus." A letter to the a want of practical sense so much in Queen contains the French phrases Milton's public and domestic life that "mettons," "sous main," "entre nous soit the world has been inclined to gloss dit," and "qui vivra, verra." On becom- over. But the poems are another mating acquainted with the German lan- ter, and whereas Professor Saintsbury guage as it was written by the founder brings to his task the great requisites of the new empire, it is not surprising of sympathy and admiration, one canthat one of the high officials during his not but feel that the result falls far reign, Dr. Stephan, inaugurated the short of what many of his predecessors movement to purge the language of its in the interpretation of Milton have foreign ingredients and restore it to its achieved. This is particularly true of the pages that are devoted specifically to "Paradise Lost," which for the most part consist not so much of criticism as erature. Edited by A. W. Ward and an evasion of criticism. To be sure, A. R. Waller. Volume VII: Cavalier the concluding sentence of this discussion sums up well the spirit of the poem. and later on we have the generally recognized peculiarities of Milton's versification accurately stated, with some additional observations on his style, but, on the whole, it is only too plain that the writer has here failed to rise "to the height of this great argument." As regards the minor poems, how can Professor Saintsbury, in his effort to make it appear that Milton's development was slow, say of the "Vacation Exercise" that only in the summoning of the rivers at the close is there any approach to individuality, "and even then there is a strong suggestion of Spenser." If any poet but John Milton could have composed the magnificent vision of heaven in this poem beginning:

Yet I had rather, if I were to choose, Thy service in some graver subject use.

ings that about one-fourth of the entire we should like to know who he was. As volume is from his pen. It is only fair intimated above, Professor Saintsbury is Dr. Ward the "Autobiography" of Lord to acknowledge, however, that of the much more successful in his other conthree chapters which he has contribut- tributions to this volume. He is, of ment of first-rate importance, as it ed-those, namely, on the Lesser Caro- course, the recognized authority on the line Poets, Milton, and the Antiquaries minor Caroline poets, and his chapter on The able article on Hobbes and Con--two are of excellent quality, and if the antiquaries-Browne, Fuller, Walton, the chapter on Milton can hardly be said and Urquhart (the translator of Rabeto fulfil all legitimate expectations in lais) - was evidently written con amore. the treatment of the second greatest fig. To some readers the quaintness of ent volume is by Prof. J. E. Spingarn, ure in our literature, it is at least not Browne's diction, his curious learning, from whose authoritative pen we have exasperatingly bad like the contribu- and his solemn and splendid rhetoric the chapter on Jacobean and Caroline tion on Shakespeare. Milton moves in are hardly an offset for the rather mea- criticism. a clearer historical light, and his pro- gre intellectual content of his writings, duction has not the endless variety of but Professor Saintsbury's wide reading cupy an even larger space than heretothe Shakespearean drama, so that no and flair for style qualify him especial- fore. Not being prepared by the convast body of critical literature has ly for critical sympathy with this most tributors they occasionally include magrown up about his life and writings, distinctive representative of seven-terial not used in the text. Thus Traas in the case of Shakespeare and even teenth century prose. No mention is herne's "Poems of Felicity," edited last Chaucer. Thus in the present instance made here of the fact, which seems, year by H. I. Bell, is recorded (with a one great stumbling-block is removed however, well established, that Sir brief indication of contents) in the bibfrom Professor Saintsbury's path, for, Thomas Urquhart drew his amazing vo itography to the chapter on the Sacred and company are those "of "The Faerie Queene' passed through a slight sieve of realism and crimeless: only in the distance, perhaps, an erring gentleman, who reprehensively derives his jests from Scripture or from want of decency." But the whole passage is worth reading.

We have dwelt thus at length on the contributions of Professor Saintsbury. because to him have been assigned not only the master-poet of the period, but, John Bunyan excepted, the most interesting of the prose-writers. Of the remaining chapters in this volume, four deal with subjects which, though of great importance, form, as it were, merely the background of literaturenamely: Scholars and Scholarship, by Watson: English Grammar Foster Schools, by J. Bass Mullinger; The Beginning of English Journalism, by J. B. Williams; The Advent of Modern Thought in Popular Literature, by Harold V. Routh. Mr. Williams's contribution contains much that is amusing and characteristic, as in the account of the patriarch of English journalism, Samuel Pecke, who was capable of quoting Hebrew sentences under the impression that he was quoting Greek. Among the other chapters on the various branches of literature especially to be commended is that of W. H. Hutton on the Caroline Divines-Traherne, Herbert, Jeremy Taylor, and the rest. The style possesses something of the meditative and spiritual quality of these classics of seventeenth century piety and eloquence. F. W. Moorman, author of the "Life of Herrick," gives an adequate account of the Caroline lyric, and A. W. Ward a full and interesting discussion of the historical and political writings in which the characterization of Clarendon is particularly felicitous. Few readers, however, will rate so low as Herbert of Cherbury-a human docuseems to us, for the life of those times. temporary Philosophy by W. R. Sorley should also not go without mention. The only American contribution to the presiz the text as being still in manuscript. One often judges incorrectly both of Here there is apparently a slight inacsis, "La religion de Milton" (1909); A. F. Leach's "Milton as Schoolboy and Schoolmaster," in the Proceedings of the British Academy (1908). Moreover, if Latin translations of "Paradize Lost" are to be included that of Hog should not be omitted, since, owing to its early date (1690), it affords striking proof of the rapidity with which the fame of Milton's great poem became established.

The bibliographies in this volume oc-

Louis XIV and Madame de Maintenon. By Charlotte Lady Blennerhassett. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.75

Lady Blennerhassett's study of the political and social fortunes of Madame de is the editor's chief concern-is admiraious crises which are coupled more gen-Royal" wrote a literary and spiritual ance in his reign. Thus we find excellent be uttered, even though good." chapters on the Spanish Succession, the duced for the hazarding of a new judgbe done, as Madame de Maintenon gratuitously destroyed all letters and journals touching in any way upon the mooted question of her marriage to the King. She will always remain a sort of biographic sphinx. As Lady Blennerhassett aptly says in conclusion:

It sounds like a fairy tale that the mightiest and most charming sovereign of Europe fell in love with the elderly widow of a not very respectable playwright and made her his wife. She never said so, and carried her secret to the grave. This also was very extraordinary, and, moreover, very grand. unwelcome visit to Madame des Ursins.

chapter. The following omissions in ordinary. The great height to which lus: the Milton bibliography seem worthy she rose as if by a miracle makes one where I now am by the tenacity of my purpose and by unceasing efforts, that I possess a singular strength of mind and a surpassing intelligence to was no work of mine. I could neither have intended nor achieved it. God The slight difference which makes us alone has been leading me to the place where I now am. . . . " Yet she certainly had her distinctive originality, especially, and perhaps uniquely, as "institutrice de la maison royale de Saint Louis," a modest title though a proud one, and the only one that she wanted Maintenon-for she rather than Louis placed upon her tomb. And if more The First English Life of Henry V. By could well be asked of the present work ble for its virile scholarship and for it might be a few short chapters of deits charming facility of expression, tailed study of Madame de Maintenon She has prepared a book which the stu- as "institutrice," her pedagogic theories, dent of French history may well keep their success and weakness, the relation on his shelf of ready reference and of teacher to student; in a word, the which the layman may read with quick- psychology of education as practised at ening interest. For the subject matter Saint Cyr. Many of her recommendais much more comprehensive than the tions, as we find them in her correspontitle indicates. It is a history of the dence, are strikingly modern. "You will career of Agrippa d'Aubigné's grand- get along much better"-it is to two daughter, first in her relations with the teachers that she is writing who com-King, but secondly and principally as a plained, qu'il faut toujours parlerfigure in the various political and relig- "if you talk less. . . . You talk too much and too fast in your instruction: erally with Louis's name than with hers. it is impossible for your girls to follow Somewhat as Sainte-Beuve in his "Port you. You do not make them talk enough. It is by what they say to you history of a century and more of French that you can determine whether or not life, so the present editor has known they are profiting. Apply yourselves how deftly to connect Louis's uncrowned then to talking in few words. Every wife with all that was of most import- thought which suggests itself should not

There is no bibliography in this work Princesse des Ursins, Fénelon and Bos- or list of works consulted; but the edisuet, Quietism, the Great Military Re- tor cites her authorities freely. These verses, and Jansenism. And yet the book are merely references, however, andis no apologia of the erstwhile wife of unless it were to make the work too Paul Scarron. Madame de Maintenon bulky-one would be glad to see occais treated with sane and just considera- sionally the very words of the original. tion. No new materials have been ad- They always add zest and interest, not infrequently another shade of meaning. ment. Nor can this probably ever By way of illustration we may take an incident recounted on pages 305-6. Briefly relating the visit of Peter the Great, who was inspecting the curiosities of France, in 1717 (Madame de Maintenon is now seventy-three years old), Lady Blennerhassett writes:

> She received him in bed: he asked her through an interpreter what was the matter, and she answered that what afflicted her was old age. He seemed not to understand and drew back her curtains. "You may imagine if he was satisfied," was her amused remark when describing this most die of the fifteenth century from ma-

One is rather surprised that Mr. Do- the character and the rôle of Madame curacy or omission. At least the incibell's most recent find, the poems of de Maintenon, because one judges them dent in question may be found in a let-William Strode, is not mentioned in this according to her fortunes, truly extra- ter of June 11, 1717, to Madame de Cayof note: Paul Chauvet's valuable the suspect in her an equal height of ambi- assis au chevet de mon lit. (Elle s'était, Le czar est arrivé à sept heures, et s'est tion and intelligence. It is a suspicion selon l'usage, couchée pour le recevoir.) Il which she foresaw in her own lifetime m'a fait demander si j'étais malade; j'ai and protested against. "People think," répondu que oui. Il m'a fait demander ce said she, "that I reached the place que c'était que mon mal: j'ai répondu: "Une grande vieillesse avec un tempérament assez faible." Il ne savait que me dire et son truchement ne paraissait pas m'entendre. Sa visite a été fort courte , J'oubliais de vous dire que le czar be able to shape the plan of an eleva- a fait un peu ouvrir le pied de mon lit tion such as mine. Oh, no. All this pour me voir: vous croyez bien qu'il en aura été satisfait.

> see in Peter the barbarian that he really was recalls a simple sentence in a grammar used by many not so long ago: Ce qui n'est pas clair n'est pas Francais.

an Anonymous Author commonly known as the Translator of Livius. Edited, with an Introduction, Annotations, and Glossary, by Charles Lethbridge Kingsford. New York: Henry Frowde. $2,90.

It has often been justly remarked that the European wars of the first half of the sixteenth century, though essentially modern in many respects, were deeply tinged with mediæval practices and ideas. This is as true of the brief occasions when England took a hand in the struggle, as of the campaigns between the Continental combatants. The very policy of fighting France was profitless and out of date: the methods of waging the war were antiquated in the extreme; but the arguments of those who opposed it were thrown away on the vainglorious young Henry VIII, the dearest wish of whose early years was to prove his personal superiority to Francis I and to revive at his expense the glories of Edward III and Henry V. So much, in fact, was this latter idea in the air during the early years of Henry's reign, that one of the lesser of that group of men whose literary and intellectual productions have added lustre to the age, conceived that he could do his young sovereign no better service than to compose, for his example and instruction, in the vernacular, a life of the victor of Agincourt.

What this man's name was we do not know. Internal evidence proves that his book was written in 1513 or 1514. Its sources are four in number: the "Vita Henrici Quinti," written about 1440 by the Italian scholar, Tito Livio da Forli; the chronicle of Monstrelet; Caxton's "Policronicon," and a life of Henry V written shortly after the midterials gathered by or under the direction of James Butler, fourth Earl of Ormond, the constant companion of the Lancastrian King in England and in France. The first three of these sources are, of course, accessible to-day, but the last is apparently no longer extant, so that the passages in the present book which are derived from it contain precious material which is not preserved elsewhere. The author has used and combined these different authorities with a considerable degree of historical skill. In his preface, or "proem," he only claims to have "translated" Tito Livio and Monstrelet; but in reality he does far more than that: he paraphrases them, and checks and controls them, in some degree, by the "Policronicon" and Ormond's Life; and thus he imparts to his narrative a personality which is quite his own. Moreover, he deserves high praise for the scrupulous care with which he cites his authority for every sentence, in the margin. Such literary honesty was by no means common in those days. Simplicity and freedom from affectation are the salient characteristics of his style. While inferior in this respect to Sir Thomas More's "Life of Richard III," which was also written in 1513, his book need not fear comparison with Hall's chronicle, nor with other historical productions of the reign.

Though unprinted, the "First English Life of Henry V" was evidently familiar to later Tudor historians, Harpsfield, Holinshed, and Stow all utilized it; the last-named possessed a copy and quoted verbatim from it, while professing to translate directly from Tito Livio and Monstrelet. As reproduced by the chronicles of Stow and Holinshed it was known and used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. The "First English Life of Henry V" may thus be said to have exerted considerable influence in fixing the traditional conception of that monarch as a hero-king.

Two seventeenth-century manuscript copies of this interesting work exist to-day: one in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, the other in the Harleian collection in the British Museum. The former is by far the better of the two, and Mr. Kingsford has printed directly from it, with some small textual corrections from the Harley MS, and from Stow. It is needless to add that he has done his work with profound learning and great accuracy. The Introduction is a model of painstaking and unpretentious scholarship: Mr. Kingsford has spared no labor to discover the essential things, and he tells them simply and clearly; on the other hand, he does not waste a word on irrelevant topics. The present book, like his edition of "Stow's Survey of London." leaves a pleasing impression of finality.

Notes

John Bigelow, at the age of ninety-four, is engaged upon the fifth volume of his "Retrospections of an Active Life." Three volumes of the work have already appeared and the fourth is completed. The Baker & Taylor Co. has the book in hand.

Recent or forthcoming books in the list of Fleming H. Revell Co. include "The Bible Zoo: Talks to Children about the Birds, Beasts, and Insects of the Bible," by Albert MacKinnon; "Arnold's Practical Comentary, 1912"; "Woodsy Neighbors of Tan and Teckle," by Charles Lee Bryson; "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide, 1912," by Martha Tarbell; "Frank Field Ellinwood, His Life and Work," by Mary Gridley Ellinwood: "Zig-zag Journeys in Camel Country," by Samuel M, and Amy E, Zwemer; "The Negro and His Needs," by Raymond Patterson; "Islam and Missions," by Samuel M. Zwemer; "The Love Story of a Maiden of Cathay, Told in Letters," by Yang Ping Yu; "Down North on the Labrador," by Wilfred T. Grenfell; "The Gist of the Lesson, 1912," by R. A. Torrey, and "Modern Church Brotherhoods," by William B. Patterson.

Among Duffield & Co.'s autumn books are, in handsome editions: Palgrave's "A Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics," illustrated by Maxfield Parrish: "A Child's Book of Stories," illustrated by Jessie Willcox Smith and selected from the old favorites by Penrhyn Wingfield Coussens: Kellogg Durland's 'Royal Romances of To-day": Edward Lear's "The Complete Nonsense Book," with new illustrations and new material, with introduction by Lord Cromer and edited by Lady Strachev: "Byways of Paris," translated from the French of George Cain by Mrs. Louise Seymour Houghton, and "In the Heel of Italy," by Martin Shaw Briggs.—In fletion: "Children of the Night," by Mary Hulbert Rogers; "Old Man Greenhut and His Friends," a collection of poker stories. by David A. Curtis, and "The Ginger Cure," by William Ganson Rose .- Juveniles: Mrs. Foster's "Sewing for Little Girls": "Stories from the New Testament for Children." by Elsa Barker: "The Cruise of the Kingfisher," a tale of deep-sea adventure by H. de Vere Stacpoole; "Mocco: An Indian Boy," by S. M. Barrett: the second series of "Grimm's Animal Stories," with pictures in color by John Rae, and "Picture Plays," by Marguerite Merington.

"The All Sorts of Stories Book," announced by Longmans for Christmas, is the twenty-third annual collected by Andrew Lang; it differs from the others in that it contains some tales that are true.

The University of Chicago Press has in hand: "The Historicity of Jesus," by Prof. Shirley Jackson Case; "Sociological Study of the Bible," by Louis Wallis; "American Poems," selected and edited with explanatory notes and bibliographies by Prof. Walter C. Bronson; "Statistical Studies in Education," by Prof. W. F. Dearborn, and "Assyrian and Babylonian Letters Belonging to the Kouyunjik Collection of the British Museum," edited by Robert Francis Harper, Vols. X and XI.

In Scribner's announcements for this Connor; "The Life Everlasting," by Marie month we note, in fletion: two volumes of short stories, "Interventions," by Georgia W. Pangborn, and "Ship's Company," by Reynolds; "The Cage," by Harold Begbie;

W. W. Jacobs—Handsome editions: Stevenson's "Treasure Island," and Mrs. Burnett's "Little Lord Fauntieroy.— Miscellaneous: a new edition of Ellis Paxson Oberholtzer's "Referendum in America"; "The Story of Korea," by Joseph H. Longford.

"The Little Lad of Bethlehem Town," a drama-poem telling an imaginary incident of the first Christmas Eve, by Emily Huntington Miller; "Jingles of a Happy Mother Goose," by Emma S. Seale, revised, and "Tahquitch Maiden," by Phebe Estelle Spalding, will be brought out shortly by Paul Elder & Co.

"The Librarian at Play" is the title of Edmund Lester Pearson's new book, announced by Small, Maynard & Co.

October 21 is the date set for publication for the following of Houghton Mifflin's books: "Broadway," by J. B. Kerfoot; "Two Years Before the Mast," by Richard H. Dana, jr., illustrated copyright edition; "A Safety Match," by Ian Hay; "The Autobiography of Sir Henry M. Stanley," edited by his wife, popular edition; "Sunday Evenings in the College Chapel," by Francis G. Peabody; "The Man of To-day," by George S. Merriam; "The Life of George Cabot Lodge," by Henry Adams; "Poems and Dramas of George Cabot Lodge," and "Leaves from the Diary of an Impressionist," by Lafcadio Hearn, Riverside Press edition.

Putnam's list of announcements includes: "South America To-day, A Study of Conditions, Social, Political, and Commercial, in Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil," by George Clemenceau; "The Greatest Street in the World" (Broadway), by Stephen Jenkins; "The Following of the Star," by Florence L. Barclay, and "The Romantic Life of Shelley, and Its Sequel," by Francis Henry Gribble.

The continuation of Romain Rolland's "Jean Christophe," entitled "Jean Christophe in Paris," issues from Holt's press on Saturday. The work consists of three books: The Market Places, Antoinette, and the House.

On the same day Holt will publish: "The United States Navy, a Handbook," by Henry Williams; John Buchan's "Sir Walter Raleigh," and Mr. Hunting's "A Hand in the Game."

"A Life of Andrew Jackson," by Prof. John Spencer Bassett, and "An Enemy to Society," by Ceorge Bronson-Howard, are in preparation by Doubleday, Page & Co.

The following are included in the autumn and holiday announcements of Forbes & Co. of Chicago; "Love's Purple," by S. Ella Wood Dean; "Ben King's Southland Melodies," illustrated; "The Twelfth Christmas, the Christ Child's Revelation," and "To Mother," twenty-five sonnets, both by Marjorie Benton Cooke; "Human Confessions" and "God and Democracy," both by Dr. Frank Crane; "A Calendar for Saints and Sinners," published annually.

George H. Doran Company's autumn announcement includes the following books in fiction, some of which have already appeared; "Corporal Cameron," by Ralph Connor; "The Life Everlasting," by Marie Corelli; John Verney, by H. A. Vachell; "The Notorious Miss Lisle," by Mrs. Baillie-Reynolds: "The Cage." by Harold Begbie; pier; "Letters to Patty," "The Search Party," "The Simpkins Plot," "Spanish Gold," "Lalage's Lovers," by G. A. Birmingham; "Whom God Hath Joined" and "The Man from the North," by Arnold Bennett; "The Fourth Watch," by H. A. Cody; "The Tenderfoot," by Anna C. Ruddy; "The High Calling," by C. M. Sheldon; "The Yellow Pearl," by Adeline M. Teskey.

The same firm is also issuing "Round About the Black Sea," by W. E. Curtis; "The Golden Land," by A. E. Copping;
"Australian Impressions," by Archibald Marshall; "Expositions on Dante," in three volumes, by John S. Carroll; "Recreations of a Booklover" and "The Shining Hour and Other Essays," by F. W. MacDonald; Complete Works of Emily Brontë, edited by W. R. Nicoll and Clement Shorter; Collected Poems of Herbert French; "A Keeper of the Robes" (Fanny Burney), by F. Frankfort Moore. Among the religious books will be "The Expositor's Dictionary of Texts," edited by W. R. Nicoll, Jane T. Stoddart, and James Moffat; "The Psychology of the Christian Soul," by George Steven; "New Testament Criticism," by J. A. McClymont; "The Sacramental Covenant," by David Smith; "Studies in the Messianic Psalms" and "The Book of Jeremiah," by Canon S. R. Driver; "Spiritual Interpretation of Nature," by J. Y. Simpson; "The Testimony of St. Paul to Christ," by J. Knowling; "Preparing to Preach," by David R. Breed; "The Problem of Human Suffering," by Buchanan Blake; "Social Advance," by David Watson; "The Church and the Divine Order," by John Oman; "The Prob-lem of the Work," by J. Wilbur Chapman; "The Death of Christ" and "Sermons on Texts," by James Denney; "The Indwelling Spirit," by W. T. Davidson; "The Cardinal Elements of the Christian Faith," by D. S. Adam: "Studies in the Highest Thought." by A. T. Schofield; "In a Wonderful Orby J. H. Swinstead; "Miracles and Christianity," by J. Wendland; "Religious Thought in Holland," by J. H. Mackay; "Christ on Parnassus," by P. T. Forsyth; "The History and Witness of Evangelical Christianity," edited by Principal Selbie; "Later Letters of Principal Marcus Dods"; "Pulpit Prayers," by A. Maclaren; "Historical Commentary on the Pastoral Epistles," by William Ramsay; "Studies in Pauline Theology," by Principal Garvie; "Christian Counsel," by David Smith; "The Work of Grace," by J. D. Jones; "Devotional Hours with the Bible," Vol. V, and "The Life of Christ," by J. R. Miller; "The Commonwealth of the Redeemed," by T. G. Selby; "In Silver Chains," by Dinsdale T. Young; "The Creed in the Pulpit" and "The Road to Unity," by Canon Hensley Henson; New uniform edition of the works of George Matheson; "The History of Dogma," by Professor Haering; "The Mysteries of Grace," by John Thomas; "Fiftytwo Sermons to Children," by James Vaughan; "A New Volume on the Life of St. Paul," by A. Deissmann. Missionary books include: "My Half-Century in China," by Archdeacon Moule; "An Englishwoman's Twenty-five Years in Tropi-cal Africa," by Gwen Elen Lewis; and "Christ in India," by C. F. Andrews.

Frank Dilnot narrates the events of the con- Mr. Root also adverted to the Canadian trations, including fascimiles of rare title-the Budget was introduced, on April 29, 1909, use and disposition of the waters which conto the time at which the Parliament bill stitute the greater part of the eastern half became law, August 18, 1911.

same firm "Two Visits to Denmark, 1872-4." modification of the treaty of 1894, with Ja-the Great," edited by Edmund G. Gardner, only question between the two Governments is announced by Lee Warner.

The "Lysistrata" will be added shortly to Benjamin Rogers's translation of Aristophanes. Bell & Sons have it in hand, who also promise for early next year the third and final volume of Swift's correspondence, edited by Elrington Ball.

In the list of Sands & Co. we note "The Mirror of Oxford: Being a Catholic History ord. of Oxford from the Earliest to Present Times," by the Rev. C. Dawson, S.J.

The marriage of Goethe to the low-born Christiane is made the subject of a novel are the publishers.

A special edition of the works of Asbiornsen will be issued in Norway to celebrate his centenary.

Sturgis & Walton have brought out a cheap edition ($2.50 net) of W. E. Geil's "Great Wall of China." In commenting on the original publication, our reviewer (May 19, 1910) described it as "full of a strange fascination for every reader who is fond of geographical and historical novelties."

'Anna Karénina." not perfectly opaque.

The sale of the first portion-1,228 lotsof the Huth library will begin at Sotheby's November 15. This first portion extends to the end of the first two letters of the alphaexclusive of the Shakespeareana to which the eighth day will be devoted.

The formal opening address of Presimore general remarks in which the speaker surveyed the achievements of the preceding year in the interests of peace. North Atlantic Coast Fisheries arbitration decision was supplemented, early in the year, by the work of a conference, held in Washington, at which representatives of settlement inter partes for the further juwhich Smith & Elder bring out this month, tions, in a manner never before possible, refreshment is increased by some fifty illus-

"The Faithful Failure," by Rosamond Na- stitutional struggle in England from the day boundary waters treaty, providing for the of the boundary between the Dominion and Edmund Gosse is publishing through the United States. Note was made of the "The Dialogues of St. Gregory, Surnamed pan; the result being that apparently the on which disagreement or irritation was possible had been adjusted. On the question of immigration of laborers, Japan had agreed to issue no pagsports to any; so that it remained simply to watch the Mexican and Canadian frontiers, to make sure that none were surreptitiously brought in The above, with the other achievements mentioned, constituted an encouraging rec-

> Prof. C. N. Gregory's statistics showing the number of exclusions and deportations for the last two or three years are significant. In 1910, 969 Chinese were deported; 24,270 by Sir James H. Yoxall. Smith & Elder aliens were debarred during the same year, with 2,695 arrested and deported after entry, an increase of nearly 100 per cent, over 1909. Of these, 3,128 were rejected on account of physical defects, 379 on account or mental defects, 1,215 on account of moral, and 312 on account of minor physical or mental defects sufficiently grave to affect their ability to earn a living. There were actually expelled, in contradistinction to being excluded, during the same time, on warrants of deportation, 315 because of physical, 709 because of mental, 554 because Thomas V. Crowell & Co. have reissued of moral defects-in all, 1.578, so that 6.602 their edition of Tolstoy's Works in fourteen aliens were returned through unfitness. Also, volumes of pocket size, with photogravure during the same period, 1.786 alien contract frontispieces. The editor is Nathan Haskell laborers were debarred and 78 deported; Dole, who also furnishes the translation of 15.907 were debarred as likely to become a Other translators are public charge. Professor Gregory classifies Isabel F. Hapgood and Aline Delano. In its these under the head of financially defective. present form the edition is handy, but in He concludes that all the cases were within some of the volumes the "Bible paper" is the recognized powers of the Government-The extent to which a carrier who is compelled to deport an alien can claim protection or indemnity therefor under the law of the country whence the one deported comes, on action brought in a foreign jurisdiction by one deported, has never been cenclusively determined. Mr. Van Dyne points out that the State to which an expelled person has emigrated has a right dent Elihu Root, delivered on April 27 last, to know the grounds on which the case has before the annual meeting of the American been decided. He then discusses recognized Society of International Law, which was grounds of exclusion. Secretary of State summarized in our notice of the October Gresham is cited as having taken the stand Journal of that society, followed, as the that unless the expelling Government were proceedings of the meeting now issued show, to establish by proof the justice of the ex-Lulsion, it would be liable to damages; and in one case that of Jewett, we obtained such an indemnity from Venezuela.

Lewis Melville, already author of a life of Thackeray and a book on the "Thackeray country," contributes to the centenary lit-Great Britain, Canada, Newfoundland, and erature a collection of fourteen light but the United States stipulated their desire readable papers under the title "Some Asto substitute, as Mr. Root expresses it, a pects of Thackeray" (Little, Brown & Co.). Three of the chapters are here printed for dicial proceedings provided for by the award the first time-Thackeray and the Dignity of the Hague tribunal. They thereby ob- of Literature, Thackeray and the Newgate tained the result that the first fruits of School of Fiction, and Some First Editions the judgment of the arbitrators are con- of Thackeray. The remaining eleven, dealcord and a peaceable arrangement, in place ing pleasantly with the criticism, the balof former strife, and the judicial settle- lads, the drawing, the illustrators, the cult, ment of fundamental questions, and render- etc., of Thackeray, have appeared in various ed it possible to proceed amicably to the English and American periodicals. The In "The Old Order Changeth," a volume adjustment of subsidiary and practical ques- suitability of the volume for post-prandial unpublished water-color drawing of 1850.

Houghton Mifflin Company has observed Thackeray's hundredth anniversary by issuing in an edition of 550 numbered copies on hand-made paper nine hitherto unpublished letters, together with a sheaf of recollections by Blanche Warre Cornish, daughter of his friend and kinsman, William Ritchiethe whole numbering 77 pages and entitled "Some Family Letters of W. M. Thackeray." Our opinion of Mr. Titmarsh will not be altered by this fresh handful of his correspondence; the letters are spirited and characteristic, entirely creditable to his humor and good heart. His woe at the prospect of a domestic dinner party is delightful: "The house is turned upside down, frantic knife-cleaning goes on, sham footmen prowl about the premises-I wish we might do it at a hotel. My rest is destroyed and my mind troubled with fear and fluster a week off-I asked William Sterling and institutions in the centuries that lie to meet you, but my dinners ain't good enough for him or he is going out of town. But you shall see a few small lions, and his preface, he deals with these matters I hope we shall get on." I hope we shall not so much in their picturesque aspect as get on! Add to that Mr. Thackeray's dictum on salad and you have a compendium of ganized life of the Middle Ages. The unihis philosophy of life: "When you think you have put in enough oil, drop in as much fullest treatment, and next to this judicial "Finland To-day" (Scribner importation), by George Renwick, is a welcome addition to the scant stock of authoritative English books on that fascinating country. The author, a genial Scotchman of wide sympathies and much knowledge of affairs, is -what so few English travellers are-sufficiently familiar with the idlom of the country to converse with the natives. He quotes intelligently bits of Swedish and Finnish prose, and even amends, here and there, existing English translations of Finnish poetry. It is a pleasure to follow him in his wanderings, and his boundless enthusiasm for fjords, cataracts, and the myriads of tiny islets is as infectious as his flowing praise of the excellence of the town hotels and of the hospitality of the simple villagers. He furnishes much valuable information concerning the industrial development of the country, but the most novel feature of the book, to English readers at least, will be the chapters on the literature, music, and art of Finland. Mr. Renwick does no more than justice to the great trio, Runeberg, Snellman, and Lönnrot, who, in the first half of the nineteenth century ushered in the literary renaissance of Finland; but the note of admiration in the chapter on art is somewhat strained. The world has not taken the painter, Edelfelt, or the sculptor, Vallgren, at Mr. Renwick's valuation. Of the latter he says that "there seems to be no limit to his genius." It would have added to the value of the summary of literary celebrities if Mr. Renwick had clearly distinguished between purely Finnish writers and those who used also, or used exclusively, Swedish. Franzén and Topelius, like the poet Runeberg, wrote only in Swedish, and the works of the modern novelist, "Juhani Aho" (some of which have been published in English translations), appear simultaneously in Swedish and Finnish. The eminent philologists, Castrén and Ahlquist, are, strange to say, absent from the list of authors. Renwick's sympathics with pages and sketches, and a portrait from an Fins in their struggles against Russian King's character as the result of his treatoppression are deep and outspoken, but he has no word of condemnation for Finnish illiberality toward the Jews. Though there are few errors in the book, a misprint (p. 219) charges the people with "a slight sense of honor," instead of humor. The year 1885 (p. 94) stands for 1855, and there are conflicting statements as to the sobriety of the Fins. The remark that in the towns, wines and spirits are always taken "at breakfast, dinner, and supper," and that "Finland is cultivating a taste for whiskey," does not seem to bear out the assertion that "she is the most sober nation in the world."

> In his "Customs of Old England" (Scribner) F. J. Snell does not attempt a comprehensive picture of mediæval life. He limits himself to selected topics, but among these are included many that illustrate the most important aspects of English customs between the Norman Conquest and modern times. Moreover, as the author states in in their fundamental relations to the orversity life of the period comes in for the and urban customs. Somewhat less full are the chapters on rural and domestic life. From the almost boundless field of ecclesiastical customs and institutions in the Middle Ages only a few matters of antiquarian and literary interest have been chosen. The work is one of popularization drawn from good sources, but it is a pity even in a book of this character that the writer should not have given us more definite references to his authorities than are contained in the merely general acknowledgments of his preface. Within the limits which he has set himself he has managed to place before the reader a great deal of information-for the most part fresh and unhackneyed. We only regret that, even among the topics he has chosen, owing to the small size of his treatise, he should have dealt so briefly with some important matters, such as the life of minstrels and the evil custom of maintenance and livery, which, by keeping, at the disposal of the nobles a retinue of lawless followers, was so largely responsible for the disorders of society. Among the corrections to be made we note that a wrong date (1099) is given to the "Assises de Jérusalem"-that is, the code of laws established by the Crusaders in their Oriental dominions. No part of this code is earlier than the last quarter of the twelfth century. What, moreover, does Mr. Snell mean by quoting a "play" of Lucian's? The reference should evidently be to the charming dialogue between Cronos and the priest.

In reissuing his "Eastern Asia" (Stokes), Ian C. Hannah has corrected details and lightened the narrative of many unnecessary names and minor events. In conse quence the book is now a fair historical sketch of Asia apart from the Mediterranean area. The style is somewhat exclamatory and even flippant, but good authorities have been followed.

Another life of Charles II has come out under the title of "The Gay King" (Brentano's). The author, Dorothy Senior, atthe tempts to explain the inconsistencies of the discrimination of that feminine something ment in Scotland in 1651. The book is on the usual lines, with the usual anecdotes and sketches of character. Its manner of telling is rather more entertaining than the average of its class.

"In the Heel of Italy," by Martin Shaw Briggs (Duffield & Co.), is based on articles originally prepared for the English Architectural Review. The city described is Lecce, and Mr. Briggs is to be congratulated on having opened for English readers a new field of remarkable interest. His descriptions and drawings of Leccese architecture will be a surprise to all but the few travellers who have visited Southern Italy. There are many fine survivals of the Norman period, and still more of the Baroque, besides the antique remains which crop out everywhere in the Terra di Otranto. Mr. Briggs devotes most of his book to the history of the city, down to the end of the Bourbon régime, fifty years ago. His last chapter, on the manners and customs of the people to-day, and on the environs, including Otranto, should be read by Americans who desire to know out of what conditions one stream of South Italian immigration flows. Mr. Briggs writes without pretence, as a good draughtsman should. Many of the excellent illustrations are reproduced from his drawings.

The three years covered in the last volume of William Foster's calendar of documents relating to the growth of the East India Company ("The English Factories in India, 1634-1636"; Clarendon Press) were unusually eventful. The English.settled at last their long-standing feud with the Portuguese and established with them an attitude of cordial friendship and mutual assistance in Indian affairs which has continued without a break to the present day. In 1635 the English sent their first ship to China-to Macao. It was during these years also that Charles I injured the Company and infringed their solemnly secured monopoly by chartering and assisting the rival and irresponsible body of interlopers known as Courteen's Association. On these and many other matters Mr. Foster sheds new light, as usual, by his judicious analysis of the documents and his careful index. One document reveals a pirate named David Jones, who caused some terror and probably scuttled some ships. May we not trace to him the origin (unknown to the Oxford Dictionary) of "Davy Jones's locker," and of that sailor's superstition, of which the earliest mention appears to be in "Peregrine Pickle," more than a century later?

The twenty-five papers by the late Edmund Clarence Stedman now brought to-gether under the name of "Genius and Other Essays" (Moffat, Yard) represent the occasional work of forty years. Much of this material is rather slight, but the level of judgment and workmanship is ever high. Stedman took his function as a man of letters with priestly seriousness, and nothing perfunctory ever came from his hands. The deft precision of his manner appears to advantage in short notices of Austin Dohson. Landor, Sidney Lanier, Mrs. Stoddard, and William Blake. Very diverting are the reminiscences of Eugene Field, to whose professional buffoonery Mr. Stedman is indulgent. The essay on Edwin Booth's acting in 1862 is of permanent worth, and the author's which made Booth's position different from Talk Bird," "Dunny," "Sunnyside Tad," and manifesting all the phenomena of life, that of the great tragedians pur sang is fine and accurate. In reviewing Bryant's translation of the "Odyssey," Stedman, following Matthew Arnold, indulged the hope that an English hexameter suitable for the task would yet be beaten out by some poet of genius. He made it clear that no other verse form would quite do. Since then has come the age of the translation into rhythmical prose, the English hexameter still remaining a desideratum. The title essay on Genius, born of a controversy, with W. D. Howells, possibly does not deserve its prominence. The briefer paper, "What Is Criticism?" contains some of Mr. Stedman's best thinking. We opened this volume with some misgiving. It seemed impossible that such a presentation of minor work should not diminish a fair but tenuous fame. Such fears were groundless. The fine breeding of Stedman, his background of the best reading. his scrupulous standards, are as prominent in this casual collection as in his coherent works. One recalls with gratitude that for fifty years mostly given over to irresponsible puffery and equally irresponsible censoriousness, Stedman pursued the task of criticism upon the theory that the critic must be at home in the entire world of letters. It is this fine breeding and complete absence of provincialism that may give Stedman's best criticism a chance for life beside the works of greater genius. He was saner and safer than either Lowell or Poe. admittedly our greatest critics, and but little their inferior in adroitness. Of the critic's office he held a finer and juster ideal than either of his more famous predeces-

The death is reported of Sir Herbert Risley, who distinguished himself as a member of the Indian civil service and as a student of anthropology and ethnology. He was the author of "Primitive Marriage in Bengal." "Widow and Infant Marriage," "Sikkim and Tibet," "Tribes and Castes of Bengal," "The People of India," and other works.

Addis Albro, author of "Our Country's Flag," the first book on the origin of the American flag, died last Sunday in Columbus, N. M., at the age of fifty-six. He was known as a clergyman, educator, and lecturer, as well as writer. At the time of his death he was collector of customs Columbus. He was a personal friend of Theodore Roosevelt, and was a delegate to the Republican convention which nominated Roosevelt for Vice-President, For two years he was chaplain of the New York Senate. He was instrumental in forming the tentative Constitution of New Mexico.

Philip Verrill Mighels, a well-known writer of short stories, died October 13 at Reno., Nev., from a gunshot wound which he accidentally inflicted on himself. He was born in Carson City, Nev., forty-two years ago. He studied law and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one. Two years afterward he went to San Francisco and engaged in newspaper work. His stories and sketches soon attracted favorable attention, and he came to New York in 1894. From that time he devoted himself solely to writing. Besides the poems of "Out of a Silver Flute," he was the author of "Nella, the Heart of the Army," "When a Witch Is Young," "The Crystal Sceptre,"
"The Inevitable," "Bruvveh Jim's Baby," "The Ultimate Passion," "Chatwit, the Man- the chromidial unit which is capable of advanced, until some parts of the book

"The Pillars of Eden," which he also dramatized.

Henry Broadhurst, the first British workingman to become a state minister, died October 11 at the age of seventy-one. was member of Parliament from 1880 to 1292, and for a while in 1886 was undersecretary of state in the Home Department. He published an autobiography and, with Sir R. T. Reid, a "Handy Book on Leasehold Enfranchisement "

Science

SOME KINDS OF EVOLUTION.

Some Neglected Factors in Evolution. By Henry M. Bernard. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.

Hereditary Characters. By Charles E. Walker. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $2.40 net.

Convergence in Evolution. Willey. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50 net.

and A. D. Darbishire. Chicago: Open Court Pub. Co. $4 net.

There are few persons who will doubt that the general acceptance of the theory of evolution was a distinct advance intellectually over the traditional cosmological views of the creation of animals and plants. It must be conceded, howsubstitution of one belief for a better one on the basis of circumstantial evidence, for while there is an abundance of what is sometimes called "indirect proof" of evolution, there is little that from resemblances based on a common may be called direct evidence to establish that principle. If this statement is challenged it need only be pointed out theory of evolution rests on these rethat those who hold fast to the theory of evolution differ widely in their opinions as to how the process has taken place and equally widely as to the causes involved. Until it becomes settled as to how animals and plants have evolved no amount of circumstantial evidence can do more than make himself would no doubt be the first to the theory of evolution a matter of great admit. probability rather than of scientific proof. It is not strange, therefore, that books about evolution continue to be written and published, in which the author, while disclaiming the use of technical language, does not hesitate to address to a popular audience a plea for some new interpretation of how the process of evolution has taken place.

Two appeals of this kind are made in two recent books. Henry M. Bernard far-reaching conclusions. Yet despite writes on "Some Neglected Factors in its erudition and the freshness of much Evolution." His study of the retina of of the new evidence discovered by De the eye convinced him that "the simplest possible combination of chromatin in the few years that have elapsed since bodies and delicate filaments" yield a the German edition appeared, how far hypothetical unit of organic structure, our ideas in regard to mutation have

On this slender basis he proceeds to build up an imaginary and highly fantastic account of a conceivable process of evolution. The organism is treated as a network of threads with nodes. The author's attempt to bring such an interpretation into accord with physiological processes shows only too clearly the purely fictitious character of his concep-

In a smaller book, C. E. Walker, director of the Glasgow Cancer Hospital. presents in a popular way the problem of heredity from the point of view of the cells, which are to him "the ultimate units of living matter." He shows a wide and somewhat superficial knowledge of modern biological work on heredity and cytology. His attempt to set up "two classes of characters that behave in different manners with regard to inheritance" cannot be taken seriously, and his hope to bring harmony By Arthur between biometricians and Mendelians is likely to be treated lightly by both schools. Instead of a scholarly and crit-The Mutation Theory, By Hugo de Vries, ical treatment of such difficult questions Vol. II. Translated by J. B. Farmer as the topics discussed, we find a onesided and arbitrary mode of settling matters that is not likely to appeal to any one familiar with the evidence at first hand.

In a treatise whose range is less pretentious than the preceding two. Arthur Willey presents a collection of heterogeneous facts to support his contenever, that the advance was largely a tion that again and again dissimilar structures or functions have been changed into very similar ones through adaptations to the same end, and hence are hard or impossible to distinguish descent. Since the entire evidence from comparative anatomy in support of the semblances, Mr. Willey is consciously undermining some of the props of evolution itself. The author's efforts are, however, so palpably literary, and the lesson intended so out of date, that the damage done to the theory of evolution is not more serious than the author

In a different category belongs the already famous book of De Vries, "Die Mutationslehre," which now after eight years appears in translation. Both the original and the translation are printed in two volumes, with the contents somewhat rearranged and abridged in the translation. Here we have a serious and technical book, with the evidence furnished in full to support the author's Vries, it is surprising to find, with-seem to be already behind the times. In unquestionably due to losses of some gest-in organic nature. In most cases it two very essential points the central contention of the mutation theory is endangered, or in need of better evidence than that first advanced to establish evolution by mutation. De Vries based his theory of heredity mainly on the behavior of the evening primrose. Enothera Lamarckiana. This plant, introduced from America, has escaped from European gardens, and at Hilversum, in Holland, De Vries found that eight or nine new types appeared annually. A large part of his book is devoted to a description of the origin and heredity of these new mutants, His studies have led him to the view that the older types of Linnæus are collective, made up of a number of elementary species or mutants. These he believes arise suddenly at a jump, as it were, as do the new types from Œnothera Lamarckiana. Instead, therefore, of the slow origin by means of selection of individual differences postulated by Darwin's theory of natural selection, the elementary species arise suddenly. The new types are not only discontinuous, but are definite from the beginning, and do not require a selective process to maintain them in their pure form. That elementary species exist in nature, cannot be disputed, but recent studies have revealed two very serious flaws in de Vries's argument that such processes as these shown by O. Lamarckiana furnish evidence as to how the process of evolution has gone on. In the first place, it has been suggested that O. Lamarckiana is not a wild type at all, but a hybrid, and in consequence the mutation observed by De Vries represents a process of "splitting" and disintegration into the original types, or into combinations of the original characters of the Europe and Davis in America have discovered evidence that throws serious doubts on the purity of O. Lamarckiana. Education," by Benjamin Marshall Davis. To this is to be added the fact that, deas Lamarckiana has been found grow- men Concerning Themselves. ing wild in this country, whereas a cross between the common species, O. biennis and O. grandiflora, gives a hybrid remarkably like, though not identical with, O. Lamarckiana. It is true that these new Hybrids show at once, when inbred, their hybrid origin, while Lamarckiana breeds true, giving for the most part only 2 per cent. of new forms. But even this apparent contradiction may be met on the grounds that Lamarckiana is a very old hybrid that has eliminated most, though not all, of its possible hybrid combinations. Should Lamarckiana prove, then, to be a hybrid, a hard blow will be dealt to the very foundation of the theory that such mutations furnish the basis for progressive evolution.

one or more characters of the wild type. De Vries called these retrogressive mutations. They follow Mendel's law of heredity. On the other hand, the question is still an open one whether new types that represent something added to the original type arise in this way. It is true that among domesticated races of animals and plants there are many types that appear to have added something to the original type from which they sprang, but a careful examination of the origin of these progressive types often furnishes little evidence that they have arisen suddenly by a single step, or else the examination shows that some inhibitory factor has dropped out whose loss permits the new character to develop further than it did in the original type. The latter cases, therefore, are still retrogressive mutations. Until these matters are cleared up the evidence for evolution furnished by the mutation theory must hang in the balance.

Even supposing, however, that it should turn out that all mutations are losses, and that therefore mutation has played, so to speak, the losing game in evolution, it does not follow that the older Darwinian idea of progressive advance through selection of individual in this volume. differences is the alternative left; for, whatever discoveries the future has in store, one fact has in recent years been clearly established, namely, that selection of individual differences can produce no such result as was claimed by Darwin. In a word, the kind of variations on which Darwin rested his theory of selection has been convincingly shown not to yield the result that Darwin's theory has maintained.

There are three science books in the list of University of Chicago Press: "Heredity hybrid parents. Leclerc du Sablon in and Eugenics," edited by Prof. John M. Coulter: "American Permian Vertebrates," by Prof. S. W. Williston, and "Agricultural Dr. E. B. Lowry has written for Forbes spite a thorough search, no such type & Co. of Chicago, "Herself Talks with Wo-

> The attempt which Prof. J. Arthur Thomson makes in his book, "The Biology of the Seasons" (Holt), to unite poetry and pure science is so nearly successful that we readily overlook any shortcomings. has written a year-book of natural history, devoting about ten chapters to each of the four seasons. The central thesis holds that "life is rhythmic, and that it is punctuated by the seasons and by other external periodic influences." Some of his illustrations follow:

Many vegetable cells, such as simple Algæ, feed during the day and divide at night. The deeply rooted inherent contrast between nutrition and reproduction is externally punctuated. Flowers open and shut, wake and sleep, periodically. Some flowers are intermittent even in their fragrance. The lines of growth on shells and on some bones indicate periodicity, like the rings of growth on a tree, or the This brings up the second point. Most of the mutants that are now known are spread—as the four illustrations may sugseems that the punctuation is from with-out, while the necessity of the alternation is from within. We can read summer and is from within. We can read summer and winter on the scales and otoliths of fish-es, just as we can read day and night on a bird's feather. The increase to the scales in the summer period is different from that in the winter period, and the daily variations in the bird's blood-pres-sure are sometimes registered, when feath-ers are a-making, by the beautiful cross-

The first chapter in each part is impressionistic and gives charmingly the season's chief traits. Professor Thomson has selected his subjects with care and has presented them in admirable form. The most serious drawback to the volume is its altogether English character. Except when the most general subjects are under discussion, one is conscious of a foreign atmosphere. The birds are English birds. so that such inaccurate statements as that which says the red grouse is the "only bird peculiar to Britain" has little significance for us. Even in a list of modern traveller-naturalists there are only English names, and more than once we find expressed rather caustic disbelief of facts obtained by American ornithologists and by other aliens. It is a pity that an American edition was not issued, with the facts and names translated. But any one with more than a passing love for our own fields and woods will find great pleasure

Dr. Agrippa Nelson Bell, one of the widest-known physicians in the country, and an authority on hygiene, died last Sunday at his home in Brooklyn, at the age of ninety-one years. He was greatly interested in quarantine work, and was largely instrumental in bringing New York's quarantine station to its present efficiency. Dr. Bell was a native of Virginia and a veteran of the Mexican and civil wars. He served for many years in the navy as an assistant surgeon, and was the author of several medical books.

Drama

"NATIONAL" PLAYS.

Mr. Yeats's attempt to set the Irish in this country straight on the nature of J. M. Synge's drama, "The Playboy of the Western World," was not surprising, considering the amount of opposition which has been shown. The main grounds for objection are said to be the immorality of the principal character-a man who kills his father, and as a fugitive from justice is sustained by other Irishmen. Mr. Yeats asks whether any one would prefer to see his country represented by a Macbeth, a Falstaff, or a Don Quixote. He insists that the central incident is not to be taken as typical of Ireland, and that to conceive of it as such is to show no artistic discrimination. The author has selected a specific-not a general-situation "around which to build his superstructure." If the play is immoral, any others in the audience. He suspects that the parricide is not wholly responsible for this violent antipathy, but that Irish-Americans dislike to see certain characters and conditions of their native land realistically presented, and he warns them that Irish art will never flourish until a writer is free to figure life as he sees it.

Race or national sensitiveness may, it is true, be as unfair to a writer as it is unreasoned. Usually, burlesque, even though it results from an author's shot at the truth, causes no hurt. In London playhouses what American but is amused by the impersonation of a compatriot chewing tobacco, inordinately "guessing," and hot-foot to buy the Sistine Madonna? And we fancy that English and French equally cast sickly smiles -but still a smile-at the "Bah Jove!" and "Oul, oul" men who represent their countries on the American stage. It is the same off the stage as on. Uncle Joe Cannon only grew the happier the more the cartoonists tilted his cigar and the longer his cake-walk strides were made. But as soon as rank exaggeration ceases, sensitiveness begins. As the legal saying has it: "The greater the truth, the greater the libel."

What undoubtedly makes the Irish uneasy in the present instance is the authority given to the portrayal by its Irish authorship. Still, they might reflect that few countries are better off in this respect than theirs. The French look almost in vain for a single drama which sets forth their life typically, and remind us that as a people they are not wholly given to domestic intrigue. And even the world which Shakespeare created is not an accurate or representative mirror, though now and then a character in his works, as, for instance, Henry V. is hailed as embodying typically English traits. Our own country is in the same predicament. Lately, we virtuous young college graduates matched against cruel hard-headed adults, or mothers willing to sell their daughters. etc. If various peoples were asked what plays they would each care to be known by, the list would surely contain as false fabrications as those to which they object. "The Rivals" and "She Stoops to Conquer" leave a pleasant taste in all to have us believe that their land is full of such attractiveness. But what of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "Mid-Channel"? If Americans were subjected to the same test, would they not still choose "The Old Homestead," rather than "The Easiest Way"? The Irish in this country are frequently confronthelps.

æsthetic, not national. One may coolly consider the desirability of an author's choosing for his central situation a remote instance. There may be cases in actual life of a man killing his father and later through repentance and struggle meriting prosperity, but instinctively one trusts that they are rare. Flying in the face of probability makes a proportionate demand upon the writer. It may be that Synge has lived up to the high praise artistically, which Mr. Yeats is trying to win for him. If so, he has created a picture which is great and true, not by virtue of its Irish setting, but because human nature in one of its most appalling aspects has been wrought to a noble purpose. Yet, successful or not, the play will never be dubbed typically Irish for centring admire and much to dubitate about. upon parricide.

Ben Greet is publishing, through Doubleday, Page & Co., "Shakespeare a Child Can Read and Act."

Houghton Mifflin Company adds this week to its Riverside Press series, "Romeo and Juliet."

Gordon Craig's forthcoming book, "On the Art of the Theatre" (Chicago: Browne's Bookstore), tries to explain the art of preparing a play for the audience, Maeterlinck's "Aglavaine et Sélysette" will be published shortly by Dodd, Mead & Co. in an English version.

On or about November 25 the Broadway Publishing Co. will issue, under the title "50 Years in Theatrical Management," reminiscences of M. B. Leavitt; the volume will have 485 separate portraits and will be sumptuously produced.

"What the Public Wants" (George H. Doran Co.), a four-act play by Arnold Benmight have been inspired by, "The Earth," rate, on the theatrical, side, Both are satirical attacks upon the modern monopoto lift the veil from some editorial myspay for. He depicts a man who, though But each individual personage theatre, which he proceeds promptly to attempt made to tamper with the reflection.

The problem created by "The Play- make profitable and popular. He even boy" is probably one, even as Mr. Yeats dreams of establishing a salon, and, with insists, not for the Irish merely, but for that end in view, engages himself to a others as well, to pass upon; is in fact clever actress, who, in the end, dismisses him, despite his vast wealth, on account of his indifference to all dictates of social decency. Mr. Bennett exposes the meanness the greed, the vulgarity, the hypocrisy, and the callous degradation of the vellow editor, and employs many humorous and forceful touches, but he has not succeeded as Mr Fagan did, in drawing a powerful and menacing personality. As drama, his work is of small account, but as a satirical squib, it may amuse many readers, especially these who can recognize the original identity of some of the fictitious characters beneath the very thin veil of disguise. Mr. Bennett assails managers and critics as well as editors, and lays himself open to the suspicion of paying off old scores.

> Otto Ludwig's "Erbförster" is a play which students of German may be expected to read with pleasure and profit, and in which students of the drama find much to edition (Holt) by Prof. M. C. Stewart is more nearly adequate to the needs of the first class of students than to the needs of the second class. The Notes interpret most of the difficult passages of the text, though the explanations given are not always either precise or satisfying; but the Introduction, unoriginal and uninspiring, does not lead to a just appreciation of Ludwie's drama. The immediate ancestor of "Der Erbförster" is Iffland's "Jäger," and every discussion of the question whether "Der Erbförster" belongs in the category of the dramas of fate must be based upon Jakob Minor's articles on this subject,

The popular and critical welcome tended to "Bunty Pulls the Strings," the Scotch comedy by Graham Moffat now to be seen in the Comedy Theatre, is due chiefly to the realistic quality of the piece, which is in effective and pleasant contrast with the artificiality so generally prevalent upon the stage. The play itself is not remarkable for either the strength or novelty of its motive, the ingenuity of its construction, nett, is on the same general subject as, and or the brilliancy of its dialogue, while the humor of it, though positive and constant, have stood before the world in terms of of James Bernard Fagin, which is a much is not always of the tonic or agreeable unscrupulous captains of industry, or stronger work on the dramatic, or, at any sort. Actually it is a somewhat cynical satire, in spite of its comic illustrations, upon the selfishness and hypocrisy of ordilistic commercial journalist. Mr. Bennett's nary human nature as exhibited in a rural experience of newspaper life enables him group of Scotch Presbyterians. The senior elder of the kirk, a flourishing grocer-who teries, and to make some fairly interesting will not permit his children even to look copy, but it may be doubted whether a out of the window on the Sabbath-has appublication office conducted upon any such propriated trust funds in order to pay the prodigal plan as he indicates would pro- debts of a son whom by his severity he has duce the millions of which he speaks so driven into evil courses, and has changed beholders, and Englishmen would like glibly. Like most facile writers, he falls his name in order to escape a woman with easily into exaggeration, but there is a whom he has broken troth. The sanctified good deal of truth, unquestionably, in his old spinster, whom he has defrauded, inconception of the character of the news- sists upon marriage as the price of silence, paper proprietor whose rule of life is to until she is proved to be a thief herself. The make money by printing stuff that the low- heroine uses her lover's savings to prevent er, more numerous, and least fastidious a family scandal, while the minor characclasses of the community are willing to ters are either ludicrous or insignificant, completely devoid of moral instinct, schol- enough to be a copy from the life, and, ed on the stage, without great irrita- arship, or natural refinement, desires to figtion, by a corrupt Irish politician. But, ure as a patron of the arts, and therefore posite action that is not entirely plausible then, he is always pictured as being confers benefactions on Oxford and as- and consistent. For once, apparently, the good to children and dogs, and that sumes the management of an independent mirror has been held up to nature and no whole thing. The author evidently is much more of an observer than a creator. Tammas Biggar, the pharisaical grocer; Susie Simpson, the vinegarish and canting old maid; Bunty herself, the bustling little Scotch body who manages so successfully her own affairs and those of everybody else; the foolish, "goody-goody" lover, Weelum Sprunt; the buxom boarding-house keeper, Eelen Dunlop, who is willing to be either wife or housekeeper, on conditions, and the miscellaneous folk who gather in the church scene, are, in almost every instance, closely akin to very old stage figures, but have been made to act and talk like veritable human beings. If they were less photographically accurate, more broadly typical of national characteristics, they would, of course, be infinitely more valuable from the dramatic and artistic point of view. As it stands, the piece is an exceedingly lifelike and amusing sketch, which is important as a comparatively new experiment in the direction of Scottish comedy. But it cannot be placed in the same category with the best Irish plays of the Abbey Theatre. Mr. Moffat is not a J. M. Synge or a J. M. Barrie.

Madame Simone, for whom Henri Bernstein wrote his play, "The Thief," and who was greatly praised in Paris for her performance of the heroine, Marie Voysin, played that part in English for the first time in Daly's Theatre on Monday evening, and won a decided though not an overwhelming success. Evidently she is an artist of fine training and rare intelligence, though not, probably, of great emotional force. When "The Thief" was produced here originally the character of Marie was interpreted by Margaret Illington with much emotional vigor and eloquence, if not with any particular subtlety. The American actress strove-and, to a certain extent, successfully-to create sympathy for a distressed woman without much reference to her conduct or deserts. Her performance appealed to sentiment rather than to the understanding. Madame Simone's interpretation, on the other hand, is intellectual rather than emotional, and is more artistic because more consistent and logical-if less theatrically impressive. It is probable also that she depicted it in the spirit designed by the author, who, doubtless, had her artistic limitations in mind when he wrote it. Briefly Marie is a woman so infatuated by her somewhat untrustworthy husband that she will stick at nothing to retain his favor. In her utter selfishness she remorselessly sacrifices an innocent youth to conceal her own treachery and crime. Madame Simone presents a woman manifestly capable of the actions ascribed to her, which Miss Illington did not do. But it must be noted that it is extremely doubtful whether Madame Simone could have exhibited the emotional abandonment of Miss Illington even if she had so desired. The impression created by her first appearance is that she is a charming and able, but not a great, performer. Her English is excellent except in passionate passages, when it is apt to become in-

E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, who will soon return to this country from their nummer vacation abroad, will open their season at the Shubert Theatre, Brooklyn, on October 30. They will then play a four ly essential to obtaining clear enunciaweeks' engagement at the Manhattan Opera tion and to protecting the vocal organs of Professor Britan's pages (207-227) in

Herein lie the power and the value of the House in this city. Their season this year from fatigue and overstrain; but it of July. No new Shakespearean play will be added to their repertory, but they will rely on "Macbeth," "Hamlet," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Merchant of Venice," "The Taming of the Shrew," "As You Like It," and "Twelfth Night," Next year they will make two new Shakespearean productions, one of which will be "Cymbeline."

> "Whether or not 'The Sentimentalists' is 'a play,' or would have been 'a play' if Meredith had ever finished it, it is delightful to see and hear it again," says a writer in the London Times, "especially after fearing that one would never see it again. Further acquaintance further reveals its wit. its wisdom, and the beauty of its language; it is the essence of Meredith, the burden of some of his 'stiffest' poems, set easily and attractively before you.'

A London journal describes one of the latest scenic inventions which Gordon Craig has patented:

The device is extremely simple. It consists of folding screens, which will stand of themselves without being fastened either to the stage or to ropes, rollers, or beams in the "flies." The screens can be made of any size required. They may be thirty feet high or only eight feet; they may have three folds or a dozen, and each fold may be one foot wide or six feet. Three men in three minutes could move or remove a whole scene, and, folded flat, each screen would take up very little space. The obvious advantages are the ease and quickness with which these things can be handled, and the simplicity of the manipulation. To change a scene would no longer be to roll up or roll down great canvases, to screw and unscrew bolts, to adjust and fasten ropes, to remove entirely an elaborately built-up set, and put another in its place. A complete change of scene can be obtained merely by rearranging a few The device extremely simple. obtained merely by rearranging a few screens. And when it is necessary (as in the case of touring companies) to take away the complete scenery of a play, the carpenters, instead of working all night and losing some very important plece of the outfit, could transport the folded screens to the van at a reasonable hour.

Music

Voice and its Natural Development. By Herbert Jennings. New York: The Macmillan Co. $1.25 net.

The Philosophy of Music. By Halbert Hains Britan. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $1.35 net.

Unfigured Harmony. By Percy C. Buck. New York: Henry Frowde. 32.

Mathews. ' Boston: Oliver Ditson Co. $1.50.

Great as is the number of books on the singing and speaking voice, after reading Mr. Jennings's little volume of ment that he is at work on a larger book which will more exhaustively con-will be a long one, extending to the first treats these topics with a directness, a lucidity, and an aptness of illustration that make it one of the most valuable of all publications on these topics. It is still as true as it was in the days of Locke that "too little care is taken to improve men in their own language so that they may be masters of it," and most actors still, as in the days of Shakespeare, mouth the speech instead of pronouncing it trippingly on the tongue. The average Englishman's delivery is, as the author remarks, loose, muffled, and "fluffy," and in the theatres it is no unusual sight to perceive people putting their hands behind their ears in order to catch a sentence. The dwindling congregations so often complained of are, in Mr. Jennings's opinion, due in some measure to the great lack of rhetorical power amongst the modern clergy. Most singers and speakers, too, suffer from frequent huskiness one variety of it is clergyman's sorethroat. The case is mentioned of one clergyman of seventy in a busy London suburb, whose speech had become so husky and indistinct that his discourses were painful to utter or to listen to, and he was nigh losing his position: but with less than two months of correct vocal study he was completely restored. The method by which such a cure can be effected is set forth here convincingly in chapters on increasing the power of the voice, defective utterance, tone and its cultivation, natural pitch, articulation, followed by sections on public speaking, emphasis, gesture, and facial expression.

From Lewiston, Maine, one would expect a book on pioneer work in some improved form of lumbering or manufacturing, rather than a treatise on the Philosophy of Music. Dr. Britan, who is professor of philosophy at Bates College, is quite mistaken in supposing that in writing his book he was doing pioneer work in musical æsthetics. There are hundreds of books, chapters, and essays on the subject quite as important as the list of seventeen treatises which make up his bibliography; a list which does not include the writings of Hegel, Schopenhauer, Eduard von Hartmann, School of the Piano Pedal. By W. S. B. Lotze, Engel, Stumpf, Helmholtz, Wallaschek, Seidl, Ehrlich, and others who have contributed important data or suggestions. Most of the things Professor Britan says are true, many of them self-evident; his style is usually so dry 220 pages one welcomes his announce- and abstruce that his pages make dull reading. Had he read the treatises just named, particularly those of Eduard sider both the cultivation of the voice von Hartmann and Stumpf, he would through its various stages of develop- have seen that he is entering as a ploment and the correction of defects. The neer a field which has already not only present volume touches only those been long cultivated, but in some parts points in training the voice for public intensively so. To many professionals, speaking and singing that are absolute- and especially to musical critics, we which he shows conclusively that the (with abundant citations from the final test of the value of a musical com- works of great masters) on the pedal position is not its sensuous beauty, or for legato playing; for connecting its form (as so many hold), but the in- basses with the chords and chords herent worth of its thought content.

Thought content is what one usually for curious and unusual effects. misses in the music of England. Pos-English composers are brought up too of teaching harmony. Percy C. Buck. who is professor of music in the Univinced that the musical knowledge acquired by figured-bass exercises, which are used almost exclusively, can by itself produce only a bricklayer, whereas every worker should cherish the hope of becoming a master-builder. His book on unfigured harmony is an attempt to teach writers how to acquire the sense of style and build on their own initiative. What a student most needs to know is how to harmonize melodies, and to this problem, in its advanced and elementary stages, the greater part of this treatise is devoted. The chapter on Harmonization of Melodies is preceded by one on Modulation and followed by three entitled Unfigured Basses, Inner Melodies, and Ground Basses. The illustrations and examples in musical type are useful and good in every way. One marvels at the thoroughness expect ed of students who try to pass the musical examinations in the Irish and English universities. Incidentally, the author pens a number of aphorisms, such as: "Few tunes start on an accented note"; "constructive ability is notoriously less common than analytic"; "the whole art of repetition in any form of art is the deliberate increasing, or abating, of emotion." Most timely and commendable is the warning given as to the "There is an unpardonable tendency amongst young students to imagine that they bring music up to date by cramming in all the accidentals possible. It is scarcely untrue to say that the reverse is the case."

One of the leading musical educators in America for many years has been W. S. B. Mathews. Among the many contributions he has made to tone pedagogy none is more valuable than his School of the Piano Pedal. It was not till the time of Chopin and Liszt that the extraordinary importance of the pedal for enriching tones and combining them into novel harmonies was understood, and to this day the majority of teachers devote most of their time to finger exercises, neglecting the pedal. To pedal a ed as long ago as 1882, in Novello's Great piece well is, however, as Mr. Mathews Musicians series (a fact which it would says, "more difficult than to write out a have done no harm to mention in the new ual hand." To teachers, therefore, as commended; in fact, there are not a Cummings, Mr. Barrett disposes of him planists who might profit by read- Composers, reserving his space for Tailis, Red Hen," among themselves; for atmosphere; and only thing to regret is that Mr. Mathews sibly this is due in part to the fact that did not discard the misleading traditional word "damper" pedal for the exclusively on figured-bass as a means mechanism on the right which removes the damper. The expression is as foolish as the word "nasal" applied to tones versity of Dublin, is at any rate con- which are not enriched by nasal reson-

> Ernest Ford is publishing through Treherne of London "A Short History of English Music."

> "The Musical Amateur," by Robert Haven Schauffler, is issued this week by Houghton Mifflin Company.

Christopher Welch has written "The Recorder and Other Flutes"; it will be published shortly by Henry Frowde, with 112 illustrations.

"Thirty Songs by Liszt" is a timely addition to Ditson's Musicians' Library. They are selected, edited, and annotated by Dr. Carl Ambruster, the eminent planist, conductor, and lecturer, who is at present musical adviser of the London County Council. Other new volumes in the Ditson series are: "Selected Piano Compositions of Schubert," edited by August Spanuth; "One Hundred Folk-Songs of All Nations," edited by Granville Bantock, and Krehbiel's selection of "Songs from the Operas," for baritone and bass voices.

Of the many biographies of Beethoven, the best is still that of the American, Alexander Wheelock Thayer. The Germans themselves have acknowledged this without dissent, and two of their scholars, H. Deiters and Hugo Riemann, have in succession incorporated in its text the results of the latest researches. Among the shorter of H. A. Rudall, who was able to build on the labors of Thayer and also those of Grove. A new edition of his "Beethoven" has just been issued by the Scribners, in company with new editions of "Mozart," by H. Cummings; and "English Church Composers," by William Alex Barrett. Gehring is a well-known German scholar, a contributor to Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians." His biography of Mozart embodies many of the most valuable points in Jahn, without any of that specialist's prolixities. In writing the life of Purcell. Dr. Cummings had no easy task, as the historians whose duty it was to gather information regarding England's foremost composer-Sir John Hawkins and Dr. Burney-neglected their opportunities. His own sketch of Purcell's career was first printreally artistic fingering for an individe edition), and it is still the standard treatise and a multitude of others who won fame in this field.

Art

Houghton Mifflin Company will issue shortly: "The Life and Works of Winslow Homer," by William H. Downes, and "Portraits of Dante," by Richard T. Holbrook.

Oxford books announced by Henry Frowde include: "Byzantine Art and Archæology," by O. M. Dalton of the British Museum.

Bell & Sons announce a volume of papers and addresses by Walter Crane, called "William Morris to Whistler," and Reginald Blomfield's "History of French Architecture from the Reign of Charles VIII to the Death of Mazarin," 2 vols., and above 300 illustrations.

In "Furniture," announced by Duffield & Co., Esther Singleton undertakes to trace the history and evolution of this art from early times.

A volume dealing with Chardin, waose significance in the development of painting Herbert E. A. Furst, the author, holds to be great, is this month added to the handsome Classics of Art series (Scribner).

Paul Elder & Co. have in hand, under the title "Envelope Brochures," a series whose purpose is to present exquisite examples of typography.

George H. Doran Company's latest additions to art gift books include: "Stories from Hans Andersen," illustrated by Edmund Dulac; "David Copperfield," illustrated by Frank Reynolds; Tennyson's "Idylis of the King," illustrated Eleanor F. Brickdale; Sheridan's "School for Scandal," illustrated by Hugh Thomson; Dickens's "Christmas Carol," illustrated by A. C. Michael; "Arundel Library of Great Masters"; "Below Zero," with colored plates by Noel Pocock, and verse by A. E. Johnson; "The Story of France," by true meaning of the word modern: sketches, none is more serviceable than that H. E. Marshall, illustrated in color: "Fairles I Have Met." by Mrs Stawell Illustrated by Edmund Dulac; "Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics," by Francis T. Palgrave, illustrated by leading artists; "Stories From the Arabian Nights," re-Dr. F. Gehring; "Purcell," by Dr. William told by Laurence Housman, drawings by Edmund Dulac; "Days With Great Composers, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert," illustrated by portraits; "Days with the English Poets, Tennyson, Byron, Browning," with twenty plates in color; Garden of Love," anthology, by May Byron; Walton's "The Compleat Angler," with color plates by J. H. Thorpe; "Thoughts on Hunting," by Peter Beckford, illustrated by G. D. Armour; "The Power of the Dog." done in color by Maud Earl, described by A. Croxton Smith: Children's Series, Including: "The Treasure-Book of Children's Verse," edited by Mabel and Lilian Quiller-Couch; "The Kewples and Dotty Darling," verses and pictures by Rose O'Neill; "The Book of Baby Beasts," illustrated by E. J. Detmold, described by on this master, whose genius had so great May Byron; "Cecil Aldin's Happy Family," well as to pupils, his treatise must be an influence on Handel. Because of the illustrated; "This Year's Book For Boys," exhaustive treatment of his labors by Dr. illustrated by color plates; "The Peck-a-Boos," color and verse by Chloë Preston; few among the best class of concert briefly in his volume on English Church "The Teddy Bearoplane," "The Little Smail and "Adventures ing this book. It has special sections Birde, Bull, Morley, Gibbons, Barnard, Dimple, and His Dog," by May Byron; "Fables from Æsop," illustrated by Percy Billinghurst.

The greater part of Cecilia Waern's "Mediæval Sicily" (Dutton) is devoted to ar account of the arts and crafts of the island in the brilliant century of Norman rule. Mosaic had not yet given way to fresco, and stone-carving had not reached the dignity of an independent art, but the churches and palaces of the Normans were decorated with all the beauties that the workers in glass and wood and marble could supply, and there remain vases, ivories, jewels, and a wealth of weven stuffs, to testify to the skill of the lesser craftsmen. The art was Norman only in its patronage. Church plans were almost invariably Byzantine, and the decoration was now Byzantine, now Saracenic, now South Italian. Miss Waern's descriptions are no less careful than enthusiastic, and she is familiar with the best technical studies of the several monuments. Her interest is in the whole life of mediæval Sicily, as well as ir its art. She traces the old streets and quarters of Palermo, and quotes at length from the curious records of travellers and geographers of the Norman period. and the luxury of the palaces are alike reflected, and bits of modern folklore that seem to be survivals from mediaval times are reported con amore. The book is finely illustrated

A. L. Baldry has inquired into the methods of nineteen British painters in watercolor, and the result of the quest is a quarto volume, with thirty-eight good color plates, called "The Practice of Water-Colour Painting" (Macmillan). Among these painters Considered as a picture-Wardle. book, this work has much to commend it. Whoever looks for practical guidance in it will be disappointed. There is no modern method of water-color painting. Wardle's amazing animals are gouached upon colored paper. The method is that of oil. Brangwyn paints either in water color or body color, but regards the mixture as a solecism. Some painters leave the original wash, some build upon it tenderly, others scrub and wash it out vigorously for texture. Some wash out when they must; others do so regularly. Some regard retouching in body color as a necessary evil, others as a usual resource. In short the much vaunted school of British water-color painting rejoices in complete anarchy, or let us say more politely in untrammelled individualism. For Mr. Baldry all ways are good, even combinations of pastel and aquarelle do not offend him. To the present writer few of the reproduced pictures seem of a quality to make the analysis of their facture either important or exemplary. It may be noted, perhaps, that men in whom the inventive quality is unmistakably strong -men like Rackham, Weguelin, and Brangwyn-have a tendency to the old-fashioned practice of leaving the original washes in their fair transparency.

The veteran landscape painter, James Aumonier, the report of whose death has reached us, was one of the few survivors of the company of English landscape painters who succeeded the pre-Raphaelite move-

Finance

EUROPEAN LENDERS AND AMERI-CAN BORROWERS.

Foreign financial critics have laid emphasis of late on one aspect of the presa financial innovation, and which has virtually every disturbance of Europe's Street in Europe were an aggravating cause. This was particularly true when the foreign bank rates were concertedly advanced in 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1909. Even in 1910, the salient fact of the day was New York's besieging of foreign money markets, Paris particularly, to raise money on new bonds, new stocks, short notes, and finance bills. What is Paris, or German bank happening this season is that, while Europe's money markets have been confronted with stringency and disorder humble life of peasants and city workmen through causes in which America had stop the trouble by enormous loans to Europe.

This European borrowing from our banks began a month ago: it was Berlin particularly which asked for loans, and offered 6 per cent. or more for them. That demand was commonly ascribed to the German crisis of the first week of September, and to preparations for the most prominent perhaps are Alfred East, financing the extraordinary requirements Frank Brangwyn, Arthur Rackham, and Ar- of the October settlement week. But the borrowing continued after the German market had recovered and the October account had been adjusted.

> Last week, the inquiry broadened to a point where international bankers estimated that our market's loans to Paris. Berlin, and London exceeded $150,been advanced to German borrowers, whose aggregate demands on this market, during the past six weeks, have been quite unprecedented. The inquiry for exchange with which to transfer these credits explains why foreign exchange has ruled firm this month, in the dented magnitude for this month-which would usually have broken foreign exchange and caused gold imports.

From the home money market's point of view, the inducement to make these foreign loans lay in the fact that Wall will lend enough more money. Street borrowers were last week bidding only 31/2 per cent, for ninety day secured ficult. Financial America saw its own loans, when virtually 41/2 per cent, was reckoning ahead, nearly two years ago. offered by German borrowers. Further It tried to avert this, first by strengthinducement, having great weight with ening its home bank position, next by the large New York banks, arose from selling to Europe all the securities and the consideration that an institution merchandise it could place with formaking such an advance to a Berlin eign buyers. All that did not prevent bank does not necessarily have to tie the impending liquidation, which was up its funds for a fixed period, as would thorough and drastic on every Ameriment. Associated with him in particular be the case in making a ninety-day loan can market, whether financial or induswere Buxton Knight, Charles, and Fisher, here. That is because the three months trial, and which released very large bill, which the German borrower gives as evidence of his indebtedness, can always be converted into cash before maturity, should the New York lender suddenly wish to use the money otherwise.

Since our banks cannot possibly, under present conditions in the speculaent confused position which amounts to tive market, lend out on call the money ordinarily employed in Stock Exchange come into stronger light this week. In demand loans, without breaking the Wall Street rate to less than 1 per cent., money markets for a decade past, until they are naturally glad to make quick this year, the urgent borrowings by Wall loans to the great bonks of Europe at such advantageous terms. The situation has even been taken advantage of by the foreign buyer of our cotton, to finance his purchases in this market. Ordinarily he would discount his bills abroad; he is able now to procure his accommodation on this side through the Wall Street correspondent of his London.

The episode is most unusual. It is not. to be sure, the first occasion when New York has loaned money on the grand scale to Europe. Our bankers took some no part, New York is doing its best to $200,000,000 of the British war loans in 1901 and 1902, besides from twenty to forty millions of new bond issues by the German Empire and the German cities. We also bought up, at a prodigious price, the English steamship lines. But that was not a result of home reserves of capital greater than home demands; for American money rates were high in that period, demands of domestic finance and industry unprecedented, and our own borrowings from Europe on finance bills had been some $250,000,000. We were actually lending Europe's own money back to

Since then-except for 1904, when our $150,000,000 loans to Japan may possibly be described as indirect ad-000,000. More than half of this sum has vances to Europe-New York has been a persistent and at times enormous borrower abroad for all sorts of purposes, including the financing of 'booms" on our Stock Exchange. We drifted very far away from the days, in 1900 and 1901, when excitable Wall Street used to talk of New York supface of shipment of cotton and other planting London as the financial centre merchandise from New York of unprece- of the world. But here is Wall Street again financing Europe, and even London explaining how another advance in the Bank of England rate may be avoided if New York will send it gold which virtually means, if New York amounts of tied-up capital. But the necessary upshot of this coincidence of so many measures of relief was, in the end, an American money market oversupplied with unemployed liquid capital.

The explanation is not altogether dif-

Just at the moment when this state of the state Just at the moment when this state of things became visible in America, Continental Europe entered on the phase of drastic financial strain which had confronted America at the beginning of

No doubt the problem of chief interest is, what the state of markets home and foreign, will be when the European liquidation also has been completed. The one certain fact is, that these recent events in international finance throw light on the unusually strong position of this country.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Abbot, C. G. The Sun. D. Appleton. $2.50

Abbott, Lyman. My Four Anchors. Boston: Pilgrim Press.

Studies Military and Diplo-Adams, C. F. Studies Military and Diplomatic, 1775-1865. Macmillan. $2.50.
Adams, S. H. Average Jones. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. $1.25 net.

Msop's Fables. Drawings by E. Boyd Smith. Century. $2 net. Anderson, Galusha. When Neighbors Were Anderson, Galusha. When Neighbors Were Neighbors. Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard. $1.20 net.

Bailey, H. T. The Victorious Surrender. Boston: Pilgrim Press. 25 cents net. Baldwin, May. Teddy and Lily's Adventures. Philadelphia: Lippincott.
Beach, E. L. Ensign Ralph Osborne. Boston: Wilde Co. $1.50.
Belcher, Henry. The First American Civil War, 1775-1778. 2 vols. Macmillan. $6.50 net.

net.
Bennet, R. A. Out of the Primitive. Chicago: McClurg. $1.35 net.
Bennett, Arnold. The Truth About an Author. New edition. Doran. $1 net.
Benton, J. H. Warning Out in New England. Boston: W. B. Clarke Co.
Béranger's Morceaux Choisis. Preface by Serge Fleury. Putnam.
Bland-Sutton, J. Man and Beast in Eastern Ethiopia. Macmillan. $3.50 net.
Bliss, W. F. History in the Elementary Schools. American Book Co. $0 cents.
Bodger, J. A Toy Party. Illustrated in color. Warne & Co. 50 cents net.
Boodin, J. E. Truth and Reality. Mac-

J. A Toy Party. Illustrated in Warne & Co. 50 cents net. J. E. Truth and Reality. Mac-color. Warne & Co. So cents net.

Boodin, J. E. Truth and Reality. Macmillan. $1.75 net.

Brainerd, Norman. Winning the Junior
Cup. Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard. $1.25

Briggs, L. B. R. Girls and Education. Boston. Houghton Mifflin. $1 net. Browning's Pied Piper of Hamelin. Illus-trated by Kate Greenaway. Warne & Co

$1.50. Bryant, E. Book of E. A. On Life's Highway: a of Verse for Graduates. Crowell.

$1.50 net.
unge, M. L. Abraham Lincoln: A Historical Drama in Four Acts. Milwaukee, Wis.: Coöperative Printery.

Burton, T. E. Corporations and the State. D. Appleton. $1.25 net. Calendar for Saints and Sinners, 1912.

Chicago: Forbes. $1.

Calendar of Letter-Books of the City of London. Letter-Book K. Temp. Henry VI. Edited by R. R. Sharpe. London. Guildhall.
Campbell, D. H. The Eusporangiatae. Car-negle Institution of Washington.

astle, W. E. Heredity in Relation to Evolution and Animal Breeding. D. Apple-

$1.50 net. Chapin,

Tale Founded on the Fairy Opera. Har-

Children's Book of Christmas. Compiled by J. C. Dier. Macmillan. $1.50 net. ocke, S. J. Bypaths in Dixle: Folk Tales of the South. Dutton. $1.25 net.

60 cents net.

Craik, Sir Henry. Life of Edward, Earl of Craik, Sir Henry. Life of Edward, Earl of Clarendon. 2 vols. Macmillan. $5.50 net. Dejeans, Elizabeth. The Far Triumph. Phil-adelphia: Lippincott. $1.25 net. Dodge, W. P. The Crescent Moon: A. Ro-mance. London: John Long. Deuglas, R. The Choice: A Dialogue Treat-ing of Mute Inglorious Art. Macmillan.

Dunn, B. A. The Scout of Pea Rioge. cago: McClurg. Earle, S. C. The Theory and Practice of Macmillan. $1.25 net. cago: McClurg.
Earle, S. C. The Theory and Practice of Technical Writing. Macmillan. $1.25 net.
Ellis, E. S. The Flying Boys in the Sky;
The Flying Boys to the Rescue. Philadelphia: J. C. Winston Co. 60 cents each. delphia: J. C. Winston Co. 89 cents each. Evans, Willmott. Medical Science of Today: A Popular Account of Recent Developments, Philadelphia: Lippincott. Ferrero, G. The Women of the Cæsars. Century Co. $2 net.
Fletcher, J. B. The Overture, and Other Recent Meanvillan, $1.25 net.

Century Co. $2 net.

Fletcher, J. B. The Overture, and Other Poems. Macmillan. $1.25 net.

Franck, H. A. Four Months Afoot in Spain. Century Co. $2 net.

Garrett, G. Where the Money Grows. Har-per. 50 cents net. Gell, W. E. The Great Wall of China.

New, cheaper edition. Sturgis & Walton. $2.50 net.

Flower O' the Peach. Gibbon Perceval

Bobbs-Merrill. $1.25 net.
Grew, E. S. The Growth of a Planet. Macmillan. $2 net.
Gummere, F. B. Democracy and Poetry.
Boston: Houghton Mifflin. $1.50 net.
Halnes, H. S. Problems in Railway Regulation. Macmillan. $1.75 net.
Harrison, E. O. The Glittering Festival.
Illustrations by C. P. Wilson. Chicago:
McClurg. $1.25 net.
Harrison Mrs. Burton. Recollections Grave.

McClurg. $1.25 net.
Harrison, Mrs. Burton. Recollections Grave
and Gay. Scribner. $2.50 net.
Harvey, W. Scottish Life and Character.
Dhiladelphia: Lippincott. $1.50 net. Harvey, W. Scottisu Dis-Philadelphia: Lippincott.

Henderson, Archibald. George Bernard Shaw. Cincinnati: Stewart & Kidd, $5 net. Hill, C. F., and Brooke, L. L. The Truth About Old King Cole. Warne & Co. $1 net.

Horace: Quintus Horatius Flaccus. Edited Horace: Quintus Horatius Flaccus. Edited by C. L. Dana and J. C. Dana. Wood-stock, Vt.: Elm Tree Press. $3. Hoskier, H. C. Concerning the Genesis of the Versions of the New Testament. 2 vols. London: Quaritch. Howard, J. R. Poems of Friendship. Crow-ell. $1 net.

Howard, J. R. Poems of Friendship, Crow-ell. $1 net.$
Hughes, T. Tom Brown's School-Days, Illustrations by L. Rhead, Harper, $1.50. Hyndman, H. M. The Record of an Ad-venturous Life. Macmillan. $1.75 net. Ingoldsby Legends. Illustrated in color by H. G. Theaker. Macmillan $2 net. Innes, A. D. An Outline of British History.

Innes, A. D. An Outline of British History. London: Rivingtons.
Jenkins. Stephen. The Greatest Street in the World: The Story of Broadway, from Bowling Green to Albanv. Putnam. Jerningham. C. E., and Bettanv. L. The Bargain Book. Warne & Co. $2.50 net. Kenneth-Brown, K. Two Boys in a Gyrocar. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. $1.20 net. Kimm. S. C. Five Hundred Regents' Questions in Biology and Zoölogy. Syracuse, N. Y.: C. W. Bardeen.

Ben King's Southland Melodies, Il-King. Forbes & Co. $1.50, ingsley, F. M. The Transfiguration of Kingsley Miss Philura. Illustrated. Funk & Wagnalls. $1 net.

Lawson, W. E. An Anonymous Confession. Boston: Pilgrim Press.

Boston: Pilgrim Press.
Lea, John. The Wonders of Bird Life.
Philadelphia: Lippincott. 75 cents.
Levv. H. Monopoly and Compet'tion.
millan. $3.25 net.

Hobbs-Merrill. $2 net.
Wylie, I. A. R. The Germans. Indianapolis.
Bobbs-Merrill. $2 net.
Young. Filson. More Mastersingers: Studies in the Art of Music. Holt. $1.35 net.

Christmas.

$1.25

$1.25.
Meade, L. T. The Doctor's Children. Phil-adelphia: Lippincott.
Mercler, C. A. Conduct and Its Disorders. Biologically Considered. Macmillan. $3.25

Essentials of Greek

Microw, C. C. The Essentials of Greek Syntax. Boston: Ginn. $1.25. Miles, Nelson A. Serving the Republic. Harper. $2 net. Mortu Proprio of Pope Plus X, Dated June

29, 1910. Chicago: Open Court Pub. Co. Murray, J. A. The Economy of Food: a Treatise on Nutrition, Food, and Diet. D. Appleton. Ottman, F. C. God's Oath. Doran. $1.25

Park, J. E. The Man Who Missed Christ-mas. Boston: Pilgrim Press.

Pascal's Pensées Choisies. Preface by Émile Boutroux. Putnam.

Émile Boutroux. Putnam.
Pearson, H. G. An American Railroad
Builder, John Murray Forbes. Boston:
Houghton Mifflin. $1.25 net.
Richberg, Donald. The Shadow Men. Chicago: Forbes & Co. $1.25.
Rignano, Eugenio. Upon the Inheritance of Acquired Characters. Trans. by B. C. H.
Harney, Chicago: Open Court Pub. Co.
$2 net.

Gibbon, Perceval. Flower O' the Peach.
Century Co. $1.30 net.
Gillpatrick, Wallace. The Man Who Likes
Mexico. Century Co. $2 net.
Goetz, P. B. The Summons of the King: A Play. Buffalo: The McDowell Press.
Gregory, M. H. Checking the Waste: A Study in Conservation. Indianapolis:
Bobbs-Merrill. $1.25 net.
Grew, E. S. The Growth of a Planet. Macmillent $2 net Red Flower Country Co.
$2 net.
Robinson, L. N. History and Organization of Criminal Statistics in the United States. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. $1 net.
Rogers, M. H. Children of the Night. Duffield. $1 net.
Russell, H. N. Determinations of Stellar Parallax. Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Santa Claus's Dolls, Edited by E. Hoyt.

Santa Claus's Dolls. Edited by E. Hoyt. Illustrated. Boston; W. A. Wilde Co. 50 cents.

Sawyer, E. A., and Walmsley, A. F. Madge Camp Welles. Boston: Wilde Co. $1.50. field. A. T. Health for Young and Schoffeld. Putnam. Old.

Old. Putnam.

Sherratt, J. H. L. The Goblin Gobblers.
Warne & Co. 50 cents net.

Spalding, A. G. America's National Game.
American Sports Pub. Co. $2 net.
Stevens Copper Handbook. Vol. X. 1910-11.
Houghton. Mich.: Horace J. Stevens.

Stevens Copper Handler Stevens Grand, G. B. Courage, Ambition, Resolution, Chicago: McClurg, 50 cents net.

Tarbell, Ida M. The Tariff in Our Times.

Macmillan. $1.50 net.

Girls and Betty. Bos-Strand, S.

tion. Chicago: M.

Tarbell, Ida M. The Tarin ...

Macmillan. $1.50 net.

Taggart, M. A. Six Girls and Betty. Boston: Wilde Co. $1.50.

Tarkington, B. Beasley's Christmas Party.

$1 net.

Troy, and other

Tarkington, B. Beasley's Christmas rang.
Harper. $1 net.
Teasdale, S. Helen of Troy, and other Poems. Putnam.

Frowledge: The Children's En-

The Book of Knowledge: The Children's Encyclopædia. Edited by Arthur Mee and Holland Thompson. Introduction by J. H. Finley, 24 vols. The Groller Society. Tolstoi's Works. Fourteen volumes. Crowell. $14 per set.
Trevelyan, G. M. Garibaldi and the Making of Italy. Longmans. $2.25 net.
Van Dyke, Henry. The Mansion. Harper. Van Saanen, M. L. The Blind Who See. Century Co. $1.20 net.
Wagner, Richard. Family Letters. Translated by W. A. Ellis, Macmillan, $1.35 net.

warren, Charles. A History of the Ameri-can Bar. Boston: Little, Brown. $4. Webster, Jean. Just Patty. Century Co. $1.20 net.

$1.20 net.
Weir, H. C. With the Flag at Panama.
Boston: Wilde Co. $1.50.
Weithree, Blanche. The Men on Horseback,
Desmond FitzGerald. $1 net.
Will, Allen S. Life of James, Cardinal Gibbons.
Baltimore: John Murphy Co. $2
net.

Williams, A. Dallas. coln: An Anthology. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. $2 net. vlie, I. A. R. The Germans. Indianapo-

Some of Henry Holt & Co.'s Fall Books

Published at 34 West 33rd St.

Pamphlet

BIOGRAPHY HISTORY TRAVEL, etc.

A new series edited by Prof. W. P. Trent. e, $1.75 net With portraits. Probable price

H. W. Boynton's The World's Leading Poets. Homer, Virgil, Dante, Shakespeare, Milton, (Nov. 11.)

G. B. Rose's The World's Leading Painters. Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, Titian, Rubens, Valasquez, Rembrandt. (Nov. 18.)

W. L. Bevan's The World's Leading Conquerors. From Alexander to Napoleon; and other volumes are in preparation.

Revised and greatly enlarged, containing some letters of Napoleon's never before published.

[The Literary Digest says that it was "Immediately accepted as the standard work on the subject.

. . . the final result of research and scholarship . . . bright and readable."] (2 Vols. Svo. $8.00 net.*

Henry S. Williams' The United States Navy. A Landbook for the general reader or enlisted man by Naval Constructor Williams, which has been passed by high authorities and officially sanctioned, apparently the first American book of the sort. With 32 full-page illustrations and others in the text. Svo. Probable price $1.50 net. (Oct. 28th).

E. J. Dingle's Across China on Foot. A trip (1909-10) from Shanghai, 1,500 miles by river and 1,600 miles by foot to the other edge of China, on the frontier of British Burmah. A good, vigorous narrative with personal interest and a spice of danger. He shows us China from the Inside. Profusely illustrated. Svc. $3.50 net.

Lovat Fraser's India Under Carzon and After. With four photogravures and four maps. Svo.

The country and the people of India are becoming the dominating factors in Asiatic politics. Lord Curzon's vice-royalty was marked by a vigorous handling of the modern problems of colonial administration.

Probable price $4.00 net. (October 28th).

CRITICISM POETRY and MUSIC

Frederic Taber Cooper's Some Representative American Story-Tellers. Papers by a favorite contributor to The Book man on the work of Crawford. Herrick, Glasgow, Chambers, Atherton Churchill, Wiggin, Phillips, Norris, Henry, Winter, Tarkington, Wharton and Bierce. With portraits. Probable price, $1.50 net.* (Nov. 4th).

Pancoast and Spacth, (Eds.) Early English Poems. A collection of famous old English verse modernized when necessary. [Selections from Beautiff, Cynewalf, Historic War Poems, Garayne, and The Greek Knight, The Debate of the Body and Soul, Chaucer, Dunbar, Lyndsay, Wyatt, Sarrey, Sir Philip Sydney, and numerous songs and ballads.] With an introduction and full notes. 12mo $1.50 net.

Charles G. Ross's The Writing of News. A practical handbook by a trained newspape man, with illustrative cuttings, "heads," etc. Probable price $1.50 net. (Nov. 4th.)

March-Phillips' Architecture and Environment.

Admirably written chapters on the art and architecture of Egyptians, Greeks, Remans, Saracens, and later European races viewed from the standpoint that these arts reveal man and furnish a key to the understanding of radial characteristics and geographic and historical conditions. About 300 pp. Svo. Probable price, $2.00 net.* (Oct. 28.)

Filson Young's Wagner Stories. The author thinks he would have had Wagner's approval in not attempting to prime his readers with motify and other high mysteries, though he has tried to "inspire the prose of these narratives with some breath of the emotional atmosphere, which it is the peculiar quality of Wagner's music to produce." From the 6th English edition. $1.50 net—"gift edition, limpleather, boxed $2.50 net".

Filson Young's Mastersingers and More Mastersingers.

Mastersingers (2d American from 6th English edition) Includes Tristan und Isolde, Tschatkowsky's "Pathetique," Bethoven's Pastoral, The Music of the Cafés, Berlioz, etc. More Masstersingers (just out), Includes The Musician as Composer, Interpreter, and Hearer, The Music of the Salon, Debussy, The Old Age of Richard Wagner, etc., etc. Either book $1.35 net.

NATURE Douglas H. Campbell's Plant Life and Evolution. BOOKS

A non-technical and decidedly readable account of the evolution of the vegetable kingdom. (American Nature Series.) Probable price $1,75 net.*

J. Arthur Thomson's The Biology of the Seasons. The author of "Darwinism and Human Life." "Studies the drama of the year with the aympathetic feeling of the old naturalists." With 12 plates in color. Svo. $2.75 net.

FICTION

Mrs. Incz Haynes Gillmore's Janey.

A humorous and sympathetic book about a little girl of nine, by the author of "Phoebe and Ernest." $1.25 net.*

Rolland's Jean Christophe in Paris. (The Market Place—Antoinette—The House.) The Springfield Republican called the earlier in Christophe'' "A book as big, as elemental, as original as though the art of fiction began to-DeMorgan's A Likely Story.

A story in Mr. DeMorgan's old vein that should be as popular as anything be has ever written.
$1.35 net.* (Nov. 4.)

H. Rider Haggard's The Mahatma and the Hare. A Dream Story. One of the great stories of animals. With 12 full-page illustrations by H. M. Brock and W. T. Horton. $1.00 not.*

Hunting's A Hand in the Game. An unusually good story of love and adventure in an American village. With colored frontispiece. $1.20 net.*

*Postage on net books 8% additional.

Just Published

A SHIP OF SOLACE

By ELEANOR MORDAUNT Author of "The Garden of Contentment" The Tale of a Sailing-ship Voyage to Australia.

The NEW YORK SUN says of it: The NEW YORK SUN says of it:

A genuine refresher . . . as stimulating to the reader as its experience was to the two women of the story. Many a best-seller has a less distinctive idea for its germ . . . The very savor and salt of the sea's soothing skill. Full of life, open air, and sayed specifications (Lith. and sound sweet sense. 12m Color frontispiece. $1.00 net. 12mo. Cloth.

THE LIKABLE CHAP

By Henry McHarg Davenport. A wholesome, spirited story of prep school life in an American Boardingschool life in an American Boarding-school—Sports on the gridiron, the diamond, and the tennis courts, youthful pluck and loyal friendships. —12mo. Cloth. Illus. $1.20 net.

STURGIS & WALTON CO. 31-33 East 27th St., New York

A NEW WRITER OF POWER Victor L. Whitechurch

CONCERNING HIMSELF. A strong autobiographical novel which makes the hero a lifelong friend to the reader. 12mo. 380 pages. Net $1,25; postage, 12 cents.

THE CANON IN RESIDENCE. This novel of life in a Cathedral town will recall Trollope's Barchester series, and will satisfy discriminat-ing readers. 12mo. 247 pages. $1.20 net; postage, 10 cents.

The Baker & Taylor Co., 33 E. 17th St., N.Y.

Studies in Distory, Economics and Public Law

Edited by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University of Columbia University

Vol. XLI. New Jersey as a Royal
Province. By Edgan Jacob Fibriar,
Ph.D. 8vo. $3.50; paper covers, $3.00.
Vol. XLIII. No. 1. Industrial Causes of Congestion of Population in New York City. By Edward Ewing
Pratty. Ph.D. 8vo. $2.50; paper covers, $2.00.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., NEW YORK

Everybody will read Sudermann's The Indian Lily

His first book since

The Song of Songs

Order your bookseller to send a copy on publication

B. W. HUEBSCH, New York

IMPORTANT BOOKS

The Country Church and the Rural Problem. By KENYON L.

BUTTERFIELD, President of the Massachusetts Agricultural College.

The aim of President Butterfield's book is to analyze the rural problem and to inquire into the influence which can most effectively aid in solving it. His conclusion is that no influence can wield more power or achieve more far-reaching results than the church itself. But the church to which he looks for the incarnation of individual and community ideals in personal and family life, in industrial effort, and in social and political relationships, is not the narrow denominational or institutional body without a programme of work and of effort. He would have a church which makes appeal to the ideals of personal development and neighborhood advancement, and which should be the dominating influence in the community.

165 pages, 12mo, cloth; postpaid, $1.65 165 pages, 12mo, cloth; postpaid, $1.08.

The Theology of Schleiermacher. By GEORGE CROSS.

Professor Cross's book introduces the English-speaking student to Schleiermacher himself. It consists principally of a condensed "thought-translation" of Schleiermacher's greatest work, The Christian Faith. The exposition is introduced by the interesting story, attractively told, of Schleiermacher's life, with emphasis on his religious experience. ligious experience. This is accompanied by a luminous account of the changes in Protestantism that necessitated a reconstruction of its doctrines. The work closes with a critical estimate of Schleiermacher's contribution to the solution of present religious problems. 360 pages, 12mo, cloth; postpaid, $1.65.

The Higher Education as a Training for Business. By HARRY

PRATT JUDSON, President of the University of Chicago.

"It is believed that students who wish may obtain knowledge and training in a college course which will fit them to be more efficient than would otherwise be the case in business activity. It is also believed that a liberal education may provide not merely such increased efficiency, but also so much wider comprehension of society and life as to enable one to be useful and to find interest in a multitude of ways not usual with one who is deprived of such an education. A college education, in short, may enable one to earn a living. It should also teach one how to live."

1. **The private of such an education in short, may enable one to earn a living. It should also teach one how to live."

1. **The private of such an education in short, may enable one to earn a living. It should also teach one how to live."

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS, Chicago, Ill.

The Baker & Taylor Company, New York
The Cambridge University Press, London and Edinburgh
Th. Stauffer, Leipzig

The Maruzen-Kabushiki-Kaisha, Tokyo, Osaka, and Kyoto.

NOTABLE LIST NEW BOOKS A OF

The Foundations of the Nineteenth Century.

Ry Houston Stewart Chamberlain. A translation from By Houston Stewart Chamberlain. A translation from the German by John Lees. With an Introduction by Lord Redesdale. Cloth. 8vo. 2 volumes. $10.00 net; postage, 50 cents.

AGENTS

This is beyond question one of the most stimulating and important books written during the last twenty years. Its phenomenal success in the German original—it has gone through eight large editions—is a strong testimonial to its

"This is a noteworthy book in more ways than one. with Buckle's 'History of Civilization,' and still more with Gobineau's 'Inégalité des Races Humaines,' for its brilliancy and suggestiveness."—Col. Theodore Roosevelt in The Outlook.

The Speakers of the House of Commons.

By ARTHUR IRWIN DASENT. A Topographical Description of Westminster at Various Epochs and a Brief Record of the Various Constitutional Changes during Seven Centuries. Illustrated by a valuable collection of portraits, including two photogravures and one in color. Cloth. 8vo. $6.50 net; postage, 25 cents.

"The amount of research shown is amazing, and the catalogue of speakers, with the places they sat for, the dates of their services, etc., is valuable to the student of English history."—Boston Evening Transcript.

The Anarchists. Their Creeds and Their Deeds.

By Ernest A. Vizetelly, author of "Emile Zola, Novelist and Reformer." Illustrated. Cloth. 8vo. $3.50 net; postage, 20 cents. Ready in October, 1911.

net; postage, 20 cents. Ready in October, 1911.

This is the first real history of the Anarchists ever attempted. Among the striking episodes which Mr. Vizetelly pictures are the unsuccessful attempts on the German Kaisers and the Spanish Kings, the Black Hand rising in Andalusia and the Barcelona outrages, the affair of the Chicago Anarchists, the two years' Bomb Terror which prevailed in Paris, the assassinations of Humbert of Italy, Elizabeth of Austria and others.

Illustrious Americans in Paris.

By John Joseph Conway, M.A., 32 full-page illustrations. Cloth. 8vo. $2.50 net; postage, 20 cents. Ready in October, 1911.

Franklin, Jefferson, Monroe, Tom Paine, La Fayette, Paul Jones, etc., etc., the most striking figures of a heroic age, working out in the City of Light the great questions for which they stood, are dealt with here.

Recollections of Guy de Maupassant.

By his valet François. Translated by Maurice Reynolds. Cloth. $3.00 net; postage, 25 cents. Ready in October, 1911.

François, who almost constantly accompanied do Maupassant, both at home and abroad during the last ten years of his life, has here given a most interesting and intimate picture of the master to whom he was so devoted.

The Community and the Criminal.

By Dr. James Devon, Medical Officer of H. M. Prison at Glasgow. Cloth. 12mo. $1.75 net; postage, 15 cents. Ready in October, 1911.

Dr. Devon in this volume gives the results of his observa-tions during sixteen years of close intercourse with criminals of all classes. The problem of how to cure crime is the principal topic of his book.

The Silences of the Moon.

By H. B. L. WEBB. Cloth. 12mo. $1.50 net; postage, 10 cents. A New Religion of Nature.

"These essays are marked by the severe simplicity of style that accompanies classic reading and the mental strength that comes to those who make a comrade of nature. The book is a masterpiece of its kind, a refreshment and a delight."—San Francisco Argonaut.

NEW YORK JOHN LANE COMPANY

THE WOMEN OF THE CAESARS

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO

A scholarly presentation of the most dramatic period in Roman history. The conditions of woman's place and of marriage among the Romans are presented fully; and there are vivid pictures of the men and women who helped make Roman history, for good and ill.

No other work covers just this ground, and the volume has, in unusual degree, value for the student and interest for the reader with only slight knowledge of Roman Superbly illustrated from paintings by Castaigne and Alma Tadema and from fine photographs. Beautifully made and bound. 8vo. 335 pages.

Price $2.00 net, postage 18 cents

A BRILLIANT PICTURE OF ANCIENT ROME BY THE AU-THOR OF "THE GREATNESS AND DECLINE OF ROME"

PUBLISHED BY

THE CENTURY CO., Union Square, New York

The Supreme Authority WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

-THE MERRIAM WEBSTER

Unbinsed Commendations establish the standing of the new work as the SUPREME AUTHORITY.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS,

Albany.

"An unsurpassed authority. The Definition are full and exact; the quotations to illustratible definitions numerous and well chosen; the youngmas discriminating and accurate, and the drive work stamped with industry and learn

DR. C. H. PARKHURST, New York SIR GILBERT PARKER, Novelist, London.

A resource for the mind, and a court of appeal for the uncertain intelligence. I prize this great book DR. HENRY VAN DYKE,

A New CREATION

The Only New unabridged diction ary in many years.

An Encyclopedia. Contains the pith and essence of an authoritative library. The Only dictionary with the New Di-vided Page. "A Stroke of Genius." 400,000 Words Defined. 2700 Pages. 6000 Illustrations. Cost $400,000.

REEP ABREAST of the TIMES. Let us tell you about the New International. Write for sample pages, full particulars, etc. Na this paper and receive FREE, a set of pecket maps

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

TORCH PRESS PUBLICATIONS-1911-1912

ETTERS FROM FRANCIS PARKMAN TO E. G. SQUIER, Ed.by Don C.Seitz. $1.50, exp. 10c. NEW PORMS. By Hon. Stephen Coleridge. 75c., postage 5c.
LEADING FACTS IN NEW MEXICAN HISTORY. Vol. I. By R. E. Twitchell. $6.00, exp. 34c.
THE IOWA INDIANS. By W. H. Miner. $1.00, express 11c.
LINCOLN AND HERNDON. By Joseph Fort Newton. $3.00, express 20c.
A COMPENDIUM OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION. By F. H. Dyer. $10.00 (delivered).
QUANTHILL AND THE BORDER WARS. By W. E. Connelley. $3.50, express 24c.
TREASON OF THE BLOOD. By E. H. Manning-Brewer. Fully illustrated. $1.00, exp. 10c.

are of each volu

THE TORCH PRESS, Publishers.

tume on request.
CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

Letters and Memorials

OF

Wendell Phillips Garrison

Editor of The Nation, 1865-1906

In one volume, crown 8vo, 300 pages, with photogravure portrait.

During the forty-one years in which he edited the Nation, with a thoroughness, ability, and conscientious devotion unsurpassed in the records of American journalism, Mr. Garrison was an indefatigable correspondent, never employing an amanuensis, but writing tens of thousands of letters with his own hand to his contributors, who embraced practically all the leading American scholars and critics of the period. From a dozen groups of these, which have been kindly loaned by the recipients, a sufficient number of selections has been made to illustrate the relations between Mr. Garrison and his great corps of contributors, the frankness and tact which he exercised towards them, and the wide range of his interests, tastes, and sympathies. volume also contains a brief sketch of his life, a dozen of his best poems, and several of his characteristic editorials, reviews, and essays, besides a fine photogravure portrait.

Price, $1.50 net, postpaid

Houghton Mifflin Company

BOSTON

NEW YORK

Lyman Abbott

Moorfield Storey

Major John Bigelow, Jr. Professor Arrhenius, Stockholm

Ambassador Bryce Professor McIlwain, Harvard

William H. Goodyear Professor Nernst, Berlin

Norman Hapgood Professor Sherrington, Liverpool Professor Thomson, Cambridge Justice Hughes

Professor Wetmore, Williams Senator Root

President Taft

are among the authors, not connected with the Yale Faculty, who are represented in the Yale University Press catalogue. Before its acceptance by the Press every work must be approved by the University Council's Committee on Publications. It follows that the catalogue deserves the consideration of every thoughtful reader. A copy will be sent on request.

YALE UNIVERSITY PRESS. New Haven. Connecticut

THE MOSHER BOOKS

M Y new and revised general Catalogue is now ready and will be sent without charge to all who are interested in choice editions at moderate

The special literary se-lections, which have given it an unique position in the world of book-making for book-lovers, are still kept up.

To-day The Mosher Books are the only genu-ine hand-made paper editions at popular prices published in America.

Thomas B. Mosher, Portland, Me.

AUTHOR'S ASSISTANT

npiling pewriting Alias Brauer
ONE MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK

Problevating
Pr

THE SUMMONS OF THE KING

A Play by PHILIP BECKER GOETZ. $1.25 net. On Sale by OTTO ULBRICH CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

A. S. Clark, Peekskill, N. Y., is a buyer and seller of books, magazines, and pam-

Che Dixie Book of Days

FOR 1912

A CALENDAR

DAILY QUOTATIONS AND FOLK LORE OF THE SOUTH

Distinctively Southern BUT

NATIONAL IN INTEREST AND ENTERTAINMENT

The work is issued in the form of a roll, each sheet representing one week of seven quotations. The anniversary dates of a great number of historic occasions are given throughout the calendar, the over of which is hand-somely illustrated with a special color design, including photogravures representing noted events in American History.

The calendar is printed in two colors, on high grade tinted paper. Price $1.00.

At all bookstores, or direct from the PAGE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION 849 Park Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

The Coward of Thermopylae

A tale of Greece in its Golden Age

By CAROLINE DALE SNEDEKER

1 Declared by University Professors throughout the country to be the finest historical novel in many years

Beautifully illustrated and decorated by Leon V. Solon

Fixed price, $1.20 (Postage 12c.) DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & CO., Garden City, N. Y.

LIBRARY RESEARCH

Researches made in Boaton and Harvard Libra es. Ancient and modern languages, Translation vision of manuscripts, etc.

MISS M. H. BUCKINGHAM, 96 Chestnut Street, Boston, Mass

TO AUTHORS AND PLAYWRIGHTS I will typewrite, revise and place your Mss., saving you time and money. My experience is very extensive. Write for rates and references. Miss GOLDBERGH, 627 Madison Avenue.

Autograph Letters of Celebrities Bought and Sold.
Send for price llats.
WALTER R. BENJAMIN,
225 Fifth Av. New York.
Pub. "THE COLLECTOR," $1 a yr.

IMPORTANT! NEW PUBLICATIONS

Choice Illustrated Books

By Hildegarde Hawthorne
A beautiful volume, dealing with the social side of gardens, by the granddaughter of the great Nathaniel Hawthorne. 16 exquisite pages in color from paintings by Jules Guesin, MaxFIELD Parish, Anna Whellan Berts, and Ivanowski, and 32 full-page illustrations in black and white. Quarto, 259 pages. Price $4.50 net, postage 28 cents. Ready October 27. THE LURE OF THE GARDEN

A GALLERY OF GIRLS
Forty full pages in color, and forty studies in black and white, of the up-to-date American girl. Price $3.00 net, postage 29 cents.

Ready October 27.

THE STORY OF FRENCH PAINTING

The ideal handbook on French art, by the author of "How to Study Pictures." "The Story of Dutch Painting," etc. 40 illus. Sq. 8vo, 200 pp. $1.20 met, postage 12c. Ready Oct. 27. By Charles H. Caffin

Out-of-the-Ordinary Fiction

THE SICK-A-BED LADY

The new book by the author of "Molly Make-Believe," the book success of last year. Stories of whimsical, searching tenderness; of quaint, delightful phrasing; of bubbling humor. Interesting illustrations. 12mo, 371 pages. Price $1.30 net, postage 11 cents.

By Jean Webster ok of rollicking school-girl fun, all about pretty, popular, mischievous Patty, and her internais at boarding-school. Clever pictures. Price $1.20 set, postage 12c. JUST PATTY TODDIE story of a woman-hater, delightfully told. The author knows golf, too.

by Vosburg. 12mo, 374 pages. Price $1.20 met, postage 12 cents.

FLOWER O' THE PEACH

A strange and gripping story of English life in South Africa, turning upon an unusual phase of the race question. 12ma, 400 pages. Price $1.30 net, postage 11 cents.

THE BLIND WHO SEE

By Marie Louise Van Saanen
The story of a rarely lovable violinist, blind; his beautiful young wife; the Other Man, who plays with fire—tensely absorbing. 12mo, 400 pages. Price $1.20 net, postage 11 cents.

THE GODS AND MR. PERRIN

A remarkable story of English school life with the boys in the background, the masters holding the center of the stage, with an unexpected ending which satisfies. 12mo, 318 pages. Price $1.20 net, postage 12 cents.

THE HAUNTED PHOTOGRAPH

A delightful new book by the author of "Sonny," "A Christmas Guest," "Sonny's Father," etc. Four of this popular author's very best stories. Ten illustrations. 16mo, 200 pages. Price $1.00 act, postage 7 cents.

Notable Biography, Essays, Travel

MARTIN LUTHER: THE MAN AND HIS WORK By Dr. Arthur C. McGlffert ordern, authoritative, and vitally interesting, a life which lars emphasis on the human qualities of the great reformer, by the Professor of Church History in Union Theological Seminary.

Illustrations. 8co, 450 pages. Price $3.00 act, postage 19 cents.

CHANGENIC CHANGENIC CONTROLLER.

THE CHANGING CHINESE By Edward Alsworth Ross, Ph.D., Li.D.

The first presentation, by a sociologist of adequate modern equipment, of the conflict of the Oriental and Western cultures in China. The author is Professor of Sociology in the Univernity of Wisconsin. Illus. from photos. Sep. 350 pp. Price $2.40 set, postage 18c. Ready Oct. 27.

THE WOMEN OF THE CAESARS

By Gugitelmo Ferrero
By the notable author of "The Greatness and Decline of Rome." A vivid and brilliant presentation of the most dramatic period of Roman history.

Beautifully made and illustrated.

Suo, 335 pages. Price $2.40 net, postage 18 cents.

AMERICAN ADDRESSES

A patriotic and scholarly volume by one of America's most noted diplomatists and public speakers. Frontispiecs. Octavo, 360 pages. Price $2.00 net, postage 14 cents.

Ready October 27.

THE MAN WHO LIKES MEXICO By Wallace Gillpatrick The lively chronicles of the author's travels and adventures among the Mexican people. Sixty-eight illustrations from unusually interesting photographs. Sec., 400 pages. Prics $2.00 act, postage 14 cents.

FOUR MONTHS AFOOT IN SPAIN

Another book by the author of "A Vagabond Journey Around the World," and just as delightful as the earlier one in its vivid descriptions of unusual scenes and its unfailing sense of humor. Sixty illustrations, 800, 400 pages. Price $2.00 net, postage 16 cents.

THE SPELL OF EGYPT By Robert Hichens An illustrated edition of that notable volume, "Egypt and Its Monuments," intended as a guide-book. 12mo, 272 pages. Price $1.25, postage 11 cents. Ready October 27.

THE CENTURY CO.

Union Square

NEW YORK

BEST

facilities for supplying

American English

German Italian

Catalogue free. Correspondence solicited.

LEMCKE & BUECHNER

Established over 50 years

30-32 West 27th St.,

New York

AGENTS FOR COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS.

irector of the Rothamsted Experimental Station, Foreign Member of the Royal Academy of Agriculture of Sweden. THE FEEDING OF CROPS AND

STANDARD WORKS

By A.D. HALL, M.A., F.R.S.

STOCK $1.50 net.

THE SOIL An Introduction to the Scientific Study of the Growth of Crops. $1.50 net.

FERTILIZERS AND MANURES $1.50 net.

E. P. DUTTON & COMPANY

L. M. MONTGOMERY'S VOLUME OF DELIGHT, The Corsican NAPOLEON'S DIARY
"One of the great diaries of literaire."—New York Times.
(Four Impressions)

THE STORY GIRL

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES," Etc.

The Ice Age in North America, and Its Bearing Upon the Antiquity of Man.

By G. FREDERICK WRIGHT, D.D., LLD., F.G.S.A. New, thoroughly revised, and greatly enlarged (fifth) edition. Two hundred illustrations, 800 pages, 8vo, cloth. $5.00, net; postage, 25 cents.

"His Ice Age in North America I regard as one the treasures of my book shelves."—Sir Robert

"The most convenient compendium in existence of the features of the glacial period."—Professor Charles H. Hitchcock.

Scientific Confirmations of Old Testament History.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
Second Edition. Forty illustrations, 450 pages, 12mo, cloth. $2.00, net; postage, 17 cents.

"This volume bids fair to be recognized as the standard work on the important subject of Pentateuchal physics."—Professor G. Macloskie in The Princeton Theological Review.

Studies in Biblical Law

By HAROLD M. WIENER, M.A., LL.B., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 128 pages, 8vo, cloth. 75 cents, net; postage, 12 cents. London: David Nutt, 57-59 Long Acre.

"An ingenious and skilful application of the principles of legal interpretation to texts in apparent conflict."—Harvard Law Review,

The Coup de Grace to the Wellhausen Critics of the Pentateuch: Essays in Pentateuchal Criticism.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

255 pages, 8vo, cloth. $1.50, postpaid.

."The book is a most important contribution to the criticism of the Pentateuch, and a straight challenge to the School of Wellhausen."—The Tablet (London).

The Origin of the Pentateuch.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

A Comprehensive Answer to the Wellhausen Critics. 150 pages, 8vo, paper. 40 cents, postpaid.

"Hardly a question ever raised, relating to the subject, that is not here treated in a fair and masterly way."—Journal and Messenger.

Miracle and Science.

Bible Miracles Examined by the Methods, Rules, and Tests of the Science of Juris-prudence as Administered To-day in Courts of Justice. By FRANCIS J. LAMB, Attorney and Counsellor-at-Law. 350 pages, 12mo, cloth. $1.50, net; postage, 12 cents.

"It is long since the reviewer read so strong and satisfying a book."—Professor William Breaton Greene, Jr., in The Princeton Theological Re-

The Person of Christ.

Being a Consideration of the Homiletic Value of the Biblical View of the Navalue of the Biblical view of the Nature of that Person. By EDWARD H. MERRELL, D.D., LL.D., Lately President and Professor of Philosophy in Ripon College. 192 pages, 12mo, cloth. 90 cents, pat. rostage. 9 cents. net; postage, 9 cents.

"The book adds another to the list of strong volumes that have been issued by this company in defence of Christ and the Bible."—Church Advocate (Harrisburg).

EIGHTY-SECOND YEAR. The Bibliotheca Sacra.

Religious and Sociological Quarterly. Edited by G. FREDERICK WRIGHT, Edited D.D., LL.D., with aid of numerous emi-nent associates.

The invaluable discussions of the Penta-teuchal Problems by Mr. Harold M. Wiener will be continued through 1912. The July and October numbers will be sent free to New Subscribers paying in ad-vance for 1912.

Terms: Annual Subscription, $3.00. Single copy, 75 cents. Foreign Sub-scription, $3.32, except Mexico, which is $3.00, and Canada, which is $3.16.

BIBLIOTHECA SACRA COMPANY OBERLIN, OHIO

THIRD EDITION NOW READY

JohnBrown: ABjography Fifty Years After

By OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD

SOME TRIBUTES TO THIS REMARKABLE HISTORICAL WORK.

Philadelphia PUBLIC LEDGER, "A tre-mendous book: more thrilling than any book of fiction, powerful in its appeal, and which, while it is written soberly, as befits history, by the very nature of the narrative often rises to the highest dramatic level."

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.
"I can only say after reading from first to last its more than 700 pages that I have never encountered anything this side of Gibbon's 'Rome' which has made me feel more the personal power of a single work."

OHN T. MORSE, Editor American Statesman Series, in ATLANTIC MONTHLY. "Ferbaps in thus dramatically fashioning his volume, Mr. Villard obeyed an instinct rather than acted upon a preconceived plan; that is often the case with a great work, where a writer's feelings are deeply enliated. Be this as it may, the merit and charm are none the less; be has seized well a splendid opportunity and has written one of the great blographies of our literature." JOHN T.

HORACE WHITE. "In my judgment a con-tribution to American literature to take rank with the very best historical writing of our time or any time. The only impartial history of the Kansas war."

ST. CLAIR MCKELWAY in the Brooklyn
EAGLE. "A blography replace with force EAGLE, "A biography replete with facts and marked by courage and candor, learning and justice."

PORTLAND OREGONIAN. "The most valuable and comprehensive biography issued this season, and the best and most candid estimate of John Brown."

W. E. CONNELLEY in the Topeka CAPITAI. "The unprejudiced student and seeker for truth will herald the book as a great contribution to American history."

Des Moines CAPITAL. "More powerful in its appeal, more dramatic than any book of fiction, is this wonderful biography of John Brown."

The North Carolina REVIEW. "In this blography Mr. Villard has touched high-water mark. The book is a delight to the reader for many reasons. Full of life and movement, written in an attractive and scholarly style, full of sympathy, and yet without any loss in accurate presentation, it sets a new standard for blographical effort."

Baltimore AMERICAN. "While the book has popular features in that it is entrancingly interesting, its scholarship is of the highest order and its style reminds one a little of Anthony Froude. . . Mr. Villard has illustrated in this book the finest ideals of literary conception and execution."

London TIMES. "It is scarcely likely that any later writer will be able either to add any-thing of importance to Mr. Villard's collection of material or to better his interpretation of the whole story. . . . It at once becomes the atandard, and probably the final authority on its theme."

Washington (D. C.) STAR. "Mr. Villard draws a compact, vivid, historic picture of the terrible focussing of this period upon our Civil War. Straight and clear in its literary way, this biography is a marvel of research and fair-mindedness."

HENRY WATTERSON in Louisville COURIER-JOURNAL. "No fault may justly be found with Mr. Villard's telling of the story. It is minute and lucid, altogether fair and unvarnished."

Burlington (Iowa) HAWKEYE. "It is a book which will take a place in the library of every well established home in this part of the country."

First Edition, October 1st; Second Edition, November 21st; Third Edition, March 1st.

Fully illustrated with portraits and other illus-With copious notes and bibliography. trations. $5.00 net. Postage 26 cents.

MOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY BOSTON NEW YORK

HERE IS A LIST OF NEW BOOKS THAT EVERY LIVE BOOKSELLER HAS IN STOCK:

Julia Magruder's new novel, "HER HUSBAND: The Mystery of a Man," is an amazing story. No novel since "The Masquerader" can compare with it for intensity of situation. Enid Lothian is a poignantly alluring heroine and her husband is a character that will live in the memory. Illustrations by Lucius Wolcott Hitchcock. $1.35 net; by mail, $1.48.

"THE MARRIAGE PORTION" by H. A. Mitchell Keays, whose earlier books, "He That Eateth Bread With Me,"
"The Road to Damascus," etc., established her reputation as a novelist of serious importance, tells a powerful story, outspokenly, but with the inevitability of the very forces of nature. Its alertly realized setting is a great American university town which is readily recognizable, and the story of Adela Cleave is as sweet and tender a love story as has been told by any American novelist. "The Marriage Portion" is indeed an important American novel. $1.35 net; by mail, $1.47. Second printing.

George C. Shedd shows in "THE INCORRIGIBLE DUKANE" that he actually knows how to tell a Western story of a new variety. Youth-exuberant, unconquerable, incorrigible Youth-is in, around and over it all. Stanley L. Wood has made four fine pictures, one strikingly reproduced in color. $1.25 net; by mail, $1.37.

Mary Openshaw, who wrote "The Cross of Honour," has given us another brilliant historical romance in "THE LOSER PAYS," a story of the French Revolution, a fine, brave tale of devotion to love and duty—the romantic love story of Rouget de Lisle, the young author of "The Marseillaise," with vivid glimpses of a penniless young lieutenant of artillery, one Napoleon Bonaparte. Colored wrapper. $1.25 net; by mail, $1.37.

"Those who want to read a thoroughly entertaining novel will find their desire satisfied by 'THE KNIGHT ERRANT, says the Rochester Post-Express. In this new novel the author of the perannially popular "Happy Hawkins," Robert Alexander Wason, again wins a well-deserved success. is a buoyant story, packed to the covers with incident, with suspense, with the spirit of the West, with the essence of story interest. The pictures are by Hanson Booth. $1.25 net; by mail, $1.37. Second printing.

There is just one baseball book for you to keep in mind for Christmas giving and that is "THE BIG LEAGUE," by Charles E. Van Loan. Why? Ask any one who reads Van Loan's stories in the magazines. Perhaps you saw what "Life" said about it. Frontispiece and colored wrapper. $1.00 net; by mail, $1.10.

William Carleton's "ONE WAY OUT: A Middle-Class New-Englander Emigrates to America" has done more to stimulate the effective thinking of the people at large than any other book since "Looking Backward." It is a book of tremendous dynamic power, "engrossing because vitally human," says "Life." $1.20 net; by mail, $1.32. 4th printing.

Please send for our 112-page Illustrated Holiday Catalogue-free

SMALL, MAYNARD & COMPANY, Publishers, Boston

Noteworthy Fall Publications

Eighteen Capitals of China

By WILLIAM EDGAR GEIL, M.A., LL.D., F.R.G.S.

With an Introduction by W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D. Ex-President of the Chinese Imperial University

This is undoubtedly the most important work of travel to be published since Shackelton's "Heart of the Antarctic," lished since Shackelton's "Heart of the Antarctic," Mr. Geil is of the stamp of such men as Livingstone and Stanley. For the last six years he has been exploring China. Recently he visited each of the several capitals of the Eighteen Provinces, mapping out their sites, and collecting a mass of literature destined to form the basis of a Chinese library. With 100 illustrations and about 12 maps. Cioth, gilt top. $5.00 net. Postpaid $5.20.

A Woman's World Tour in a Motor

By HARRIET WHITE FISHER.

This is a striking account of a remarkable tour of 23,000 miles in a motor car, made by Mrs. Clark-Fisher. The first of its kind ever undertaken and completed by a woman. Her experiences in many lands, among strange peoples, and in circumstances of hardship, danger, delight, and humor, make this unusual book fascinating alike to the motor lover and the traveller. Profusely illustrated. 8vo. Cloth, $2.00 net. Postpaid $2.25.

Behind Turkish Lattices

By HESTER D. JENKINS.

The author lived for nine years in Constantinople, and she has given us here an intimate account of a Turkish woman's life. 12mo. Cloth, gilt top. 24 illustrations. $1.50 net.

Shadows of Old Paris

By G. DUVAL

An historical picture of the older Paris, whose stately mansions and beautiful gardens are fast fading away. Fully illustrated in color and half-tone by J. Gavin. Square 8vo. Cloth, gilt. $2.50 net.

The Old Road

By H. BELLOC

A charming account of the historical road from Hampshire to the Straits of Dover. Illustrated profusely by William Hyde. 8vo. Cloth, gilt. $2.00

Myths and Legends of Flowers, Trees, Fruits and Plants

IN ALL AGES, AND IN ALL CLIMES

By CHARLES M. SKINNER.

Flowers and trees have gathered about them many Flowers and trees have gathered about them many stories and have inspired many more, of absorbing interest in themselves and hitherto so difficult to locate in history and literature. Mr. Skinner has gathered them together in the present volume, making it an invaluable work of nature-tore. Photogravure frontispiece and ten illustrations in due tone. 17mc Ornavental Citch 2150 net. 12mo. Ornamental Cloth. $1.50 net.

The Superstition Called Socialism By G. W. de TUNZELMANN.

This important work will appeal to every thinking advocate of social progress, for it is a dis-passionate argument from facts which the references given will enable every reader to verify for himself. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50 net.

In Château Land

Again, as in her "Italian Days and Ways" and in "An English Honeymoon," Miss Wharton takes a merry party of friends upon a pleasure trip. This time it is through the storied chateaux of Touraine that the travel-lers journey, stopping en route at some of the picturesque villas upon Twenty-five full-page illustrations in duo-tone. Large 12mo. Decorated cloth, gilt top, $2.00 net. Postpaid $2.15.

The Practical Book of Oriental Rugs

All that it is necessary to know about oriental rugs under one cover.

10 full-page illustrations in color.74 full-page illustrations in doubletone.

text designs in line. Folding charts and maps of the Orient.

Handsome 8vo. Cloth. Gilt top, decorated box, $4.50. Postpaid $4.70.

Life of James McNeill Whistler

By ELIZABETH R. and JOSEPH PENNELL.

A popular-priced edition of the only authoritative life of Whistler

The Pennells have thoroughly culled the material in the former edition and added much new matter. It is therefore not only a new edition, but really a new book. Fully illustrated with 96 plates reproduced after Fully illustrated with 96 plates reproduced after Whistler's famous paintings. Crown 8vo. Whistler binding, deckle edge, $3.50 net. Three-quarter grain levant, $7.50 net.

The Encyclopaedia of Sports and Games

Edited by the EARL OF SUFFOLK AND BERKSHIRE.

The compilation of this work and the bringing it up to date has been done at a cost of $60,000. It gives all available information upon games The articles are written by the foremost experts of America and England, and every branch of sport and outdoor games is thoroughly described. Over 2000 illustrations, many in color. 4 large octavo volum Cloth. Gilt tops. $12.00 net.

Napoleon and His Coronation By FRÉDÉRIC MASSON

Translated by Frederick Cobb.

An interesting historical study of the causes which led to the coronation of Napoleon by the Pope, and the events resultant therefrom. With 7 illustrations by Myrbach. 8vo. Cloth. $3.50 net.

The True Daniel Webster

By SIDNEY GEORGE FISHER, Litt.D., LL.D.

This new biography of an immortal American is a valuable addition to The True Series. Mr. Fisher has given us a true history of the life of this great man, telling facts without fear or favor, and giving much new information and many portraits and scenes of Webster's environment never before published. 24 illustrations. Octavo. Buckram, gilt top, $2.00 net. Postpaid, $2.15.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY Publishers Philadelphia

